SEC. 3102. FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds—

(1) that the pension plan asset accumulations under existing pension plans—

(A) are increasingly being distributed at job termination or otherwise used for current consumption, thus removing a major source of national savings necessary for capital formation; and

(B) because of the increasingly mobile nature of the Nation's labor force and because of the lack of an effective pension portability mechanism, are not being efficiently utilized to pay monthly benefits for death, disability, and retirement; and

(2) that it is therefore desirable and in the interests of employees and their employers that employees and the pension plans under which they are covered be encouraged to retain accrued benefits for payment in the form of retirement income by making available a more efficient portability plan arrangement.

(b) Declaration of Policy.—It is hereby declared to be the policy of this subtitle to further national retirement income policies by providing for portable pension plans—

(1) which will encourage the expansion of employer funded pension coverage and result in a more efficient and equitable tax and retirement income delivery system; and

(2) which will provide a more efficient mechanism for pension portability and the preservation of pension plan assets to be distributed in monthly benefit form to meet death, disability, and retirement needs.

PART A—PORTABLE PENSION PLANS

SEC. 3111. UTILIZATION OF ROLLOVER INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS AND ANNUITIES AS PORTABLE PENSION PLANS; DISTRIBUTION AND PORTABILITY REQUIREMENTS.

"(ii) Application requirements.—A distribution to an individual or an individual's beneficiary will be made only in accordance with a timely written application by the individual (or a beneficiary in the case of the individual's death) which is made in accordance with the terms of the arrangement and which—

"(I) requests the distribution,

"(II) designates for such distribution a form permitted under clause (iii), and

"(III) specifies the date on which such distribution is to commence.

For purposes of this clause, a distribution shall be treated as made in a form described in subclause (I), (II), (III), or (IV) if such distribution is made in an equivalent form consisting of a series of periodic payments determined in accordance with the principles applicable under section 72(t) with respect to a series described in section 72(t)(2)(A)(iv).

"(B) Spousal consent in selection of form of distribution other than 50 percent joint and survivor form.—In any case in which an individual has an account balance under the arrangement other than by reason of being a beneficiary and the beneficiary is the spouse of such individual, the arrangement does not meet the requirements of this paragraph unless such arrangement provides that the distribution of the account balance will be in the form described in subparagraph (A)(iii)(II) except to the extent another form described in subparagraph (A)(iii) is elected by the individual in writing and the election meets the spousal consent requirements of subparagraph (D).

"(i) the spouse of an individual, but only—

"(I) if such individual has an account balance under the arrangement other than by reason of being a surviving spouse or other beneficiary (as defined clause (ii) or (iii)), and

"(ii) any other person designated by an individual described in clause (i)(I), or by the terms of the arrangement, who is or may become eligible under the arrangement to receive some or all of the account balance, if the spousal consent requirements of subparagraph (D) are met, or

"(iii) with respect to amounts transferred directly to such arrangement from any other plan (including investment income attributable thereto), the beneficiary under such other plan or arrangement.

"(D) Spousal consent requirements.—The spousal consent requirements of this subparagraph are met if, with respect to an election under subparagraph (A)(iii)(VI) or (B) or a designation under subparagraph (C)(ii)—

"(i) the spouse of the individual consents in writing to the election or designation, the elected form or designation may not be changed without spousal consent (or the consent of the spouse expressly permits changes in the form or designation without any requirement of further consent by the spouse), and the spouse's consent acknowledges the effect of such consent and is witnessed by a notary public, or

"(ii) the individual states in writing witnessed by a notary public that the consent required under clause (i) may not be obtained because there is no spouse, because the spouse cannot be located, or because of such other circumstances as may be prescribed in regulations referred to in section 417(a)(2)(B).

Any consent by a spouse (or establishment that the consent of a spouse may not be obtained) under the preceding sentence shall be effective only with respect to such spouse.

"(E) Applicability of distribution requirements to individual retirement accounts and annuities.—Nothing in this subsection shall affect the applicability to an individual retirement account or annuity forming a part of a portable pension plan of the requirements of subsections (a)(6) and (b)(3).

"(7) Employee may elect simplified alternative salary reduction arrangement under a uniform simplified employee pension.—

"(A) In general.—A simplified employee pension meeting the requirements of subparagraph (B) shall not fail to meet the requirements of this subsection for a year solely because such pension provides that an employee may elect to have the employer make payments for such year—

"(i) as elective employer contributions to the pension on behalf of the employee, or

"(ii) to the employee directly in cash.

"(B) Requirements.—The requirements of this subparagraph are met for any year with respect to a simplified employee pension to which an employer makes payments under this subsection for such year if—

"(i) each employee with respect to whom payments are made by the employer to a simplified employee pension for such year is eligible to make the election described in subparagraph (A)(i),

"(D) Rules governing employer contributions.—

"(II) Employment at end of year may be required.—The participation requirements of this clause and paragraph (2) shall not be considered as not met solely because the employer does not make contributions for any year with respect to all employees who were not employed by the employer as of the last day of the year. The preceding sentence shall not apply with respect to any employee who rendered any service to the employer during such year and with respect to whom the employer made a contribution for the immediately preceding year.

"(II) Declared annual contribution.—Except as provided in subclause (V), for purposes of this clause, the declared annual contribution of an employer for an employee for any year equals the product derived by multiplying the compensation amount described in subclause (III) by the percentage described in subclause (IV).

"(III) Compensation amount.—The compensation amount described in this subclause is an amount equal to the lesser of the total compensation paid to the employee during the year (including payments made by the employer to the simplified employee pension pursuant to an election described in subparagraph (A)(i)), or the dollar amount in effect for such year under paragraph (3)(C).

"(IV) Percentage.—The percentage described in this subclause is a uniform percentage which, for purposes of this subclause, is fixed for such year by the employer with respect to all simplified employee pensions for all employees with respect to whom employer contributions are made for such year.

"(V) Supplemental contributions.—The declared annual contribution of an employer for an employee for any year may be increased by a uniform monetary amount which is fixed for such year by the employer with respect to all simplified employee pensions, and declared by the employer under subclause (VI), for all employees with respect to whom employer contributions are made for such year.

"(VI) Reporting of taxable year, monetary amount, and percentage to the simplified employee pension.—The requirements of this subparagraph are not met with respect to employer contributions under a simplified employee pension unless the pension provides that the employer's taxable year, the uniform percentage fixed by the employer with respect to employees pursuant to subclause (IV) for such taxable year, and the uniform monetary amount fixed by an employer with respect to employees pursuant to subclause (V) for such taxable year must be declared by the employer to the pension together with the employer's first contributions to the pension with respect to an employee for such year.

"(E) Exception for State and local and tax-exempt pensions.—This paragraph shall not apply to a simplified employee pension maintained by—

"(i) a State or local government or political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, or

"(ii) an organization exempt from tax under this title.

(a) State Plan Requirement.—Section 402(a)(19) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(19) provide that the State has in effect and operation a Fair Work Opportunities Program approved by the Secretary of Labor as meeting all of the requirements of section 416 and of part C of this title;".

(b) Establishment and Operation of State Programs.—Part A of title IV of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"FAIR WORK OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

"Sec. 416. (a) Purpose.—It is the purpose of the Fair Work Opportunities Program required under subsection (b) to assure that needy children and parents obtain the education, training, and employment which will help them avoid long-term welfare dependence.

"(b) Establishment and Operation of Programs.—As a condition of its participation in the Family Support Program under this part, each State shall establish and operate a Fair Work Opportunities Program approved by the Secretary of Labor as meeting the requirements of part C of this title.

"(c) Participation.—(1) Each adult recipient of family support supplements in the State who is not exempt under paragraph (3) shall be required to participate in the Fair Work Opportunities Program under part C to the extent that the program is available in the political subdivision where he or she resides and State resources otherwise permit. The State public assistance agency (as such term is defined in section 431(6)) shall take such action as may be necessary to ensure that each recipient of such supplements (including each such recipient who is exempt under paragraph (3)) is notified and fully informed concerning the education, training, and work opportunities offered under the program.

"(2) The State may require participation in the program under part C by recipients who are not exempt under paragraph (3) (hereinafter referred to as 'mandatory participants'), and shall also extend the opportunity to participate in the program to recipients who are exempt under paragraph (3) (hereinafter referred to as 'voluntary participants'). The State shall actively encourage such exempt recipients to participate in the program, and shall from time to time furnish to the Secretary of Labor appropriate assurances that it is doing so.

"(3) The following are exempt from mandatory participation in the program under part C—

"(A) an individual who is ill, incapacitated, or 60 years of age or over;

"(B) an individual who is needed in the home because of the illness or incapacity of another family member;

"(C) the parent or other caretaker relative of a child under 3 years of age (subject to the last sentence of this paragraph); except that the State shall permit and encourage participation in the program in the case of parents and other caretaker relatives of children who have attained 1 year of age but who have not attained 3 years of age, where appropriate day care is guaranteed to the relative involved and his or her participation is on a part-time basis;

"(D) the parent or other caretaker relative of a child who has attained 3 years of age but not 6 years of age unless appropriate day care is guaranteed to such relative and his or her participation is on a part-time basis;

"(E) the parent or other caretaker relative of a child who has attained 6 years of age but not 15 years of age unless appropriate day care is guaranteed to such relative during any period while such child is not in school or is not otherwise receiving care during the time such parent or relative is participating in the program under part C;

"(F) an individual who is working 20 or more hours a week;

"(G) a child who is under the age of 16 or attending, full time, an elementary, secondary, or vocational (or technical) school, except in the case of a minor parent with respect to whom the State has exercised its option under section 417(c);

"(H) a woman who is pregnant; and

"(I) an individual who resides in an area of the State where the program is not available.

In the case of a two-parent family to which section 407 applies, the exemption under subparagraph (C), (D), or (E) shall apply only to one parent or other caretaker relative; but the State may at its option make such exemption inapplicable in any such case to both of the parents or relatives involved (and require the participation in the program of one of them on a full-time basis) if appropriate child care is guaranteed in accordance with the applicable provisions of such subparagraph.

"(4) If the parent or other caretaker relative or any dependent child in the family attends (in good standing) a school, an accredited postsecondary institution, or a course of vocational or technical training which can reasonably be expected to lead to employment, at the time he or she would otherwise commence participation (as a mandatory participant or voluntary participant) in the program under part C, such attendance shall constitute satisfactory participation in the educational or training component of the program (by that parent, caretaker, or child) so long as it continues; and the family support plan shall so indicate. The costs of such school or training shall not constitute federally reimbursable expenses for purposes of section 403 (but this sentence shall not prevent the State from providing or making reimbursement for the cost of day care and other supportive services which are necessary for such attendance in accordance with section 402(g)).

"(5) For purposes of paragraph (3), the term 'appropriate day care' means only day care that (A) provides to the parent or caregiver, a safe, healthy, supportive setting appropriate for the age and individual needs of their children; (B) provides unlimited parental access; (C) posts in clear public view the appropriate telephone number for filing any complaint regarding child care quality, or health or safety violations; and (D) complies fully with all local health and fire safety standards (as required by section 402(g)(1)(B) of this Act as amended by title II of the Family Welfare Reform Act of 1987).

"(d) SPECIAL EFFORTS.—With the objective of making the most effective use of resources available to a State, special efforts shall be undertaken under this section and part C of this title to develop and provide needed services and activities for—

"(1) families with a teenage parent, and families with a parent who was under 18 years of age when the first child was born;

"(2) families that have been receiving aid to families with dependent children or family support supplements continuously for two or more years;

"(5) families with older children in which the youngest child is within 2 years of being ineligible for family support supplements because of age.

"(e) PRIORITIES.—To the extent that the resources available to a State are not adequate to accommodate the provision of services to all mandatory participants and voluntary participants under this section and part C, first consideration shall be given to those (whether mandatory or voluntary participants) who actively seek to participate in program activities.

"(f) ORIENTATION.—(1)(A) During orientation, the State public assistance agency shall provide each applicant for family support supplements full information (verbally and in writing) about the opportunities offered by the Fair Work Opportunities Program under part C and the rights, responsibilities, and obligations of participants in the program, the obligations of the State agency to provide necessary supportive services (including child care), and descriptions of transitional child care services and health coverage transitional options.

"(B) As part of such orientation, the local resource and referral agency, or (if resource and referral agencies are not in place) an agency representative knowledgeable about child care, shall also provide (i) information on the type and locations of quality child care services available within the geographical area reasonably accessible to applicants, (ii) assistance to such recipients to select developmentally appropriate quality child care services, and (iii) assistance to such recipients to make arrangements to obtain such child care services.

"(C) The information described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall also be provided to all current recipients of family support supplements within six months after regulations are issued to implement this section and shall also be available at any time to recipients of family support supplements who did not receive orientation under this subsection at the time of their initial application for such supplements or who need additional information about the program.

"(2) During the orientation described in paragraph (1), each applicant for or recipient of family support supplements shall be informed of the exemptions provided under subsection (c)(3), and the consequences of a refusal to participate in the program if not so exempt. Whether or not such applicant or recipient is so exempt, he or she shall be informed of the opportunity to receive first consideration for services by actively seeking to participate in the program and shall be given appropriate opportunities to indicate his or her desire to participate at the end of the orientation session. Each such applicant or recipient shall also be notified in writing, within a month after the orientation, of the opportunity to indicate his or her desire to participate in the program, including a clear description of how to enter the program.

"(g) JOB SEARCH.—Job search by an applicant for family support supplements may be required or assisted while his or her application is being processed. During orientation, each applicant shall be informed that job search by a participant may be required or assisted after his or her initial assessment, after his or her education or training, and at other appropriate times during his or her participation in the program under part C, as may be set forth in the agency-client agreement entered into between such individual and the State work initiatives agency under part C and as otherwise provided by such State agency. After 8 weeks of job search activity without obtaining a job, a participant shall not be required to continue in such job search activity, but shall be provided education, training, or other activities designed to improve his or her prospects for employment. No requirement imposed by the State under the preceding provisions of this subsection may be used as a reason for any delay in making a determination of an individual's eligibility for family support supplements or in issuing a payment to or on behalf of any individual who is otherwise eligible for such supplements.

"(h) SANCTIONS.—(1) If any mandatory participant in the program under part C fails without good cause to comply with any requirement imposed with respect to his or her participation in such program—

"(A) the needs of such participant (whether or not section 407 applies) shall not be taken into account in making the determination with respect to his or her family under section 402(a)(7), and

"(B) if such participant is a member of a family which is eligible for family support supplements by reason of section 407, and his or her spouse is not participating in the program, the needs of such spouse shall also not be taken into account in making such determination.

The sanction described in subparagraph (A) (and the sanction described in subparagraph (B) if applicable) shall continue until the participant's failure to comply ceases; except that such sanction shall continue for a minimum of 3 months if the failure to comply is the participant's second or a subsequent such failure.

"(2) No sanction shall be imposed under paragraph (1) until appropriate notice thereof has been provided to the participant involved, and until conciliation efforts have been made to discuss and resolve the participant's failure to comply and to determine whether or not good cause for such failure existed. In any event, when a failure to comply has continued for 3 months, the State public assistance agency shall promptly remind the participant in writing of his or her option to end the sanction by terminating such failure.

"(3) If a voluntary participant drops out of the program under part C after having commenced participation in such program, he or she shall thereafter be given no priority so long as other mandatory or voluntary participants are actively seeking to participate under subsection (e).

"(i) WORK SUPPLEMENTATION PROGRAMS.—(1) Any State may institute a work supplementation program under which such State, to the extent it considers appropriate, may reserve the sums which would otherwise be payable to participants in the program under this section as family support supplements under the State plan approved under this part and use such sums instead for the purpose of providing and subsidizing jobs for such participants (as described in paragraph (3)(C) (i) and (ii)), as an alternative to the supplements which would otherwise be so payable to them under such plan.

"(2)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, Federal funds may be paid to a State under this part, subject to the provisions of this section, with respect to expenditures incurred in operating a work supplementation program under this subsection.

"(B) Nothing in this part, or in any State plan approved under this part, shall be construed to prevent a State from operating (on such terms and conditions and in such cases as the State may find to be necessary or appropriate) a work supplementation program in accordance with the provisions of this Act applicable to this subsection.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State may adjust the levels of the standards of need under the State plan to the extent the State determines such adjustments to be necessary and appropriate for carrying out a work supplementation program under this subsection.

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State operating a work supplementation program under this subsection may provide that the need standards in effect in those areas of the State in which such program is in operation may be different from the need standards in effect in the areas in which such program is not in operation, and such State may provide that the need standards for categories of recipients of family support supplements may vary among such categories to the extent the State determines to be appropriate on the basis of ability to participate in the work supplementation program.

"(E) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State may make further adjustments in the amounts of the family support supplements paid under the plan to different categories of recipients (as determined under subparagraph (D)) in order to offset increases in benefits from needs-related programs (other than the State plan approved under this part), to the extent the State determines such adjustments to be necessary and appropriate to further the purposes of the work supplementation program.

"(F) In determining the amounts to be reserved and used for providing and subsidizing jobs under this subsection as described in paragraph (1), the State may use a sampling methodology.

"(G) Notwithstanding section 402(a)(8) or any other provision of law, a State operating a work supplementation program under this subsection may reduce or eliminate the amount of earned income to be disregarded under the State plan to the extent the State determines such a reduction or elimination to be necessary and appropriate to further the purposes of the work supplementation program.

"(3)(A) A work supplementation program operated by a State under this subsection shall provide that any individual who is an eligible individual (as determined under subparagraph (B)) shall take a supplemented job (as defined in subparagraph (C)) to the extent that supplemented jobs are available under the program. Payments by the State to individuals or employers under the program shall be treated as expenditures incurred by the State for family support supplements under the State plan for purposes of section 403(a)(1) and (2), except as limited by paragraph (4) of this section.

"(B) For purposes of this subsection, an eligible individual is an individual (not exempt under subsection (c)(3)) who is in a category which the State determines should be eligible to participate in the work supplementation program, and who would, at the time of his or her placement in the job involved, be eligible for family support supplements under the State plan if such State did not have a work supplementation program in effect.

"(C) For purposes of this subsection, a supplemented job is—

"(i) a job provided to an eligible individual by the State work initiatives agency under part C; or

"(ii) a job provided to an eligible individual by any other employer for which all or part of the wages are paid by such agency.

A State may provide or subsidize any job under the program under this subsection which such State determines to be appropriate.

"(D) At the option of the State, individuals who hold supplemented jobs under a State's work supplementation program shall be exempt from the retrospective budgeting requirements imposed pursuant to section 402(a)(13)(A)(ii) (and the amount of the aid which is payable to the family of such individual for any month, or which would be so payable but for the family's participation in the work supplementation program, shall be determined on the basis of the income and other relevant circumstances in that month).

"(E) Section 439 shall apply with respect to assignments of eligible individuals to supplemented jobs under this subsection.

"(4) The amount of the Federal payment to a State under section 403(a) for expenditures incurred in making payments to individuals and employers under a work supplementation program under this subsection shall not exceed an amount equal to the amount which would otherwise be payable under paragraph (1) or (2) of such section if the family of each individual employed in the program had received the maximum amount of family support supplements payable under the State plan to such a family with no income (without regard to adjustments under paragraph (2) of this subsection) for a period of months equal to the lesser of (A) nine months, or (B) the number of months in which such individual was employed in such program. Expenditures so incurred shall be considered to have been made for family support supplements under the State plan for purposes of section 403(a)(1) and (2).

"(5) Wages paid under a work supplementation program shall be considered to be earned income for purposes of any provision of law.

"(6) Any State which chooses to operate a work supplementation program under this subsection must provide that any individual who participates in such program, and any child or relative of such individual (or other individual living in the same household as such individual) who would be eligible for family support supplements under the State plan approved under this part if such State did not have a work supplementation program, shall be considered individuals receiving family support supplements under the State plan approved under this part for purposes of eligibility for medical assistance under the State plan approved under title XIX.

"(j) Uniform Reporting Requirements.—The Secretary shall establish uniform reporting requirements under which each State will be required periodically to furnish such information and data as the Secretary may need to ensure that the purposes and provisions of this section are being effectively carried out, including at a minimum—

"(1) the average monthly number of families participating in the program under this section, the types of such families,

"(2) the amounts expended under the program (as family support supplements and otherwise) with respect to such families,

"(3) the length of time for which such families are assisted child care cost for such families,

"(4) the nature of child care arrangements for such families, and

"(5) the numbers of children in each age group (infants, toddlers, preschool, and school age) receiving child care assistance.

The information and data so furnished shall be separately stated with respect to each of the services and activities under this section.".

“(3) to the Secretary for approval of the plan.

“(e) NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY FOR HEARING.—The Secretary shall notify the State work initiatives agency within 45 days after submission of the State plan whether it has been approved or disapproved. Any notice of disapproval shall include a statement of the reasons for such disapproval. A State plan shall not be disapproved unless the State work initiatives agency has been afforded an opportunity for a hearing on the plan.

“ASSESSMENT AND FAMILY SUPPORT PLAN

“SEC. 435. (a) INITIAL ASSESSMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF FAMILY SUPPORT PLAN.—The State work initiatives agency shall make an initial assessment of the educational, child care, and other supportive services needs, as well as the skills, prior work experience, and employability of each participant in the program under this part, including a review of the family circumstances and of the needs of the children as well as those of the adult caretaker. The assessment of the educational needs of each participant shall include testing of literacy and reading skills. On the basis of such assessment, the State work initiatives agency and the participating members of the family (or the adult caretaker relative in the family with respect to any such participant who is a child) shall negotiate a family support plan for the family. The family support plan shall set forth and describe all of the activities in which participants in the family will take part under the program, including the child care and other supportive services that will be provided to facilitate participation; and shall, to the maximum extent possible and consistent with this part, reflect the choices of such participants.

“(b) AGENCY-CLIENT AGREEMENT.—(1)(A) Following the initial assessment and the development of the family support plan with respect to any family under this section, the State work initiatives agency and the participating members of the family (or the adult caretaker relative in the family with respect to participants who are children) shall negotiate and enter into an agency-client agreement including—

“(i) a commitment by the participants (or adult caretaker relative) to participate in the program in accordance with the family support plan,

“(ii) a description in detail of the activities in which the participants will take part and the conditions and duration of such participation, and

“(iii) a description in detail of all of the activities, including child care and other supportive services, which the State will arrange and the services which the State will provide in the course of such participation.

“(B) Each participant (or adult caretaker relative) shall be given such assistance as may be required in reviewing and understanding the family support plan and his or her obligations and those of the agency as specified in the agency-client agreement. Prior to signing the agency-client agreement, each participant shall be afforded an opportunity, for a period of not to exceed 10 days, to review the proposed agreement, to request additional information concerning its terms and contents, and to renegotiate any appropriate provision of the agreement which he or she deems necessary.

“(2) Each participant shall be guaranteed an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State work initiatives agency in the event of any dispute involving the contents of the family support plan, the contents or signing of the agency-client agreement, the nature or extent of his or her participation in the program as specified therein, the availability of child care and other supportive services, or any other aspect of such participation which is provided for under this section (including any dispute involving the imposition of sanctions under section 402(h) of this Act and the participant's right to conciliation before any such sanction is imposed); and the agency-client agreement shall so provide. The agency-client agreement shall be signed by the participant (or adult caretaker relative) and the agency representative responsible for implementation of the agreement.

“(3) The State work initiatives agency shall assign to each participating family a member of the agency staff to provide case assistance services to the family; and the case assistant so assigned shall be responsible for—

“(A) obtaining or brokering, on behalf of the family, any other services which may be needed to assure the family's effective participation,

“(B) monitoring the progress of the participant, and

“(C) periodically reviewing and renegotiating the family support plan and the agency-client agreement as appropriate.

Amounts expended in providing case assistance services under this paragraph shall be considered to be expenditures for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan.

“COMPREHENSIVE EDUCATION, TRAINING, JOB, AND SUPPORT SERVICES

“SEC. 436. (a) COMPREHENSIVE SERVICES.—Comprehensive services to be offered to participants under this part shall include—

“(1) job search services, including (but not limited to)—

“(B) job search and job club activities;

“(C) job and career counseling;

“(D) testing and assessment;

“(E) labor market information; and

“(F) referral to employers;

“(C) bilingual education for individuals with limited English proficiency;

“(D) high school or equivalent education (combined with training when appropriate) for individuals who lack a high school diploma; and

“(E) appropriate specialized advanced education;

“(3) training programs, including (but not limited to)—

"(A) job readiness activities to help prepare participants for employment;

"(B) institutional job skills training;

"(C) on-the-job training; and

"(D) work experience;

"(4) necessary support services, as required by subsection (c);

"(5) counseling, information, and referrals to help participants experiencing personal or family problems which may affect their ability to engage in work; and

"(6) job development, job placement, and follow-up services to assist participants in securing and retaining employment and advancement.

"(b) TRANSITIONAL EMPLOYMENT.—Comprehensive services may also include transitional employment, subject to the requirements of section 437.

"(c) SUPPORT SERVICES.—Eligible participants receiving any of the services described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) or in subsection (b) shall be provided such related support services as are necessary to enable such individuals to participate therein. Related support services shall include transportation and child care assistance. Any individual who is the parent or other caretaker relative of any dependent child or incapacitated individual and whose family ceases to be eligible for family support supplements under the State plan under section 402 as of the close of any month (if at that time the family has earnings) shall continue to be entitled to reimbursement for the costs of any appropriate day care (subject to the applicable dollar limitations specified in section 402(g)(1)) which is determined by the State agency to be reasonably necessary for his or her employment, for a period of up to 12 months after the close of such month, under a sliding scale formula established by the State which shall be based on the family's ability to pay (and under which such applicable dollar limitations are appropriately reduced to reflect such ability).

"(d) EDUCATION SERVICES.—(1) Any participant lacking a high school diploma shall, before being required to participate in any other services or activities, be required to participate in a program which addresses the education needs identified in the participant's initial assessment, including high school or equivalent education designed specifically for participants who do not have a high school diploma, remedial education to achieve a basic literacy level, or instruction in English as a second language; and both the family support plan and the agency-client agreement shall so provide. Any other services or activities to which such a participant is assigned under the agreement may not be permitted to interfere with his or her participation in an appropriate education program under this paragraph. Any participant pursuing a high school or equivalent education shall not be required to participate in other services or activities.

"(2) Children in participating families who are not themselves participants in the program under this part shall be encouraged to take part in any suitable education or training programs available under the program authorized by this part; and the program must also provide to such children additional services specifically designed to help them stay in school (including financial incentives as appropriate), complete their high school education, and obtain marketable job skills. Activities in which such children participate may not, however, be permitted to interfere with their school attendance.

"(3) An individual who attends an accredited postsecondary institution (on not less than a half-time basis), as long as such individual is making satisfactory progress in a vocational or undergraduate education or training program consistent with the individual's employment goals, shall be deemed to be participating satisfactorily under this part without participating in any other program or activity.

"(e) REPETITION OF PROGRAMS PROHIBITED.—An individual who has completed participation in a program component described in paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) shall not be required to participate again in the same component.

"(f) WORK EXPERIENCE PROGRAMS.—(1) Any State which chooses to do so may establish a work experience program in accordance with this subsection. The purpose of such programs is to provide marketable work experience and training for individuals who are not otherwise able to obtain employment, through a combination of work experience and vocational training or educational activities as part of a planned sequence set forth in the participant's family support plan. Such programs shall be designed to move participants into regular public or private employment. Such programs must be able demonstrably—

"(A) to provide marketable skills to participants without previous work experience,

"(B) to upgrade the existing skills of participants with limited previous work experience, or

"(C) to transform obsolete skills into marketable skills.

"(2) Work experience programs shall be limited to projects which serve a useful public purpose in fields such as health, social service, environmental protection or conservation, education, urban and rural development and redevelopment, welfare, recreation, public facilities, public safety, and day care. Priority with respect to the selection of agencies carrying out such projects shall be given to those agencies which offer child care or health care. To the extent possible, the prior training, experience, and skills of a recipient shall be used in making appropriate work experience assignments. Participants in a program under this subsection may not fill unfilled vacancies.

"(3) A State which elects to establish a work experience program under this subsection shall operate such program so that each participant, in conjunction with vocational training or educational activities, performs unpaid work experience (for a total of not more than 30 hours a week) for a period not exceeding 3 months.

"(4) No participant shall be assigned to a position under this subsection unless—

"(A) the participant's initial assessment identifies lack of recent work experience as a barrier to immediate placement in regular public or private employment;

"(B) the participant is unable to be placed in work supplementation programs established pursuant to this title, or in unsubsidized employment;

"(C) the assignment is part of a planned sequence of activities, specified in both the family support plan and the agency-client agreement, which is designed to prepare the participant for regular public or private employment; and

"(D) the participant has not been employed during the preceding 6 months.

"(5) If at the conclusion of his or her participation in the work experience program, the individual has not become employed, a reassessment with respect to such individual shall be made and a modified family support plan developed. In no event shall any individual who has completed the activities described in this subsection be required to repeat such activities or be reassigned to perform other unpaid work experience, unless—

"(A) the individual requests to repeat such activities or be reassigned to perform other unpaid work experience, and such request is reflected in a modified family support plan; or

"(B) such extension would lead to employment in an on-the-job training position.

Any extension under this paragraph shall be only for the time period described in paragraph (3).

"(6) The State shall provide coordination between a work experience program operated pursuant to this subsection, any program of job search, and the other work-related activities under this part so as to ensure that job placement will have priority over participation in the work experience program.

"(7) Participants in such programs may not be required, without their consent, to travel unreasonable distances from their homes or remain away from their homes overnight.

"TRANSITIONAL EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 437. (a) RESTRICTIONS ON TRANSITIONAL EMPLOYMENT.—Transitional employment provided under this section includes only employment (for wages) which shall be—

"(1) with a public or nonprofit private employer;

"(2) for a period not to exceed 6 months, unless at the end of such 6-month period additional transitional employment is determined to be necessary in a review and modification of the family support plan; and

"(3) partially or wholly subsidized under this part.

"(b) ELIGIBILITY FOR TRANSITIONAL EMPLOYMENT.—An individual may not be provided with transitional employment under this section unless such transitional employment is part of the family support plan and the individual—

"(1) has been a participant for at least 6 months in comprehensive services (as described in section 436), including job search, or such longer period as may be required for the participant to achieve substantial progress in the education component of such services; and

"(2) has been unable to secure unsubsidized employment.

"(c) PRIORITIES.—In providing transitional employment for such individuals, priority shall be given to transitional employment which—

"(1) provides services to other eligible participants, such as child care and transportation; or

"(2) is likely to lead to unsubsidized employment, directly or through on-the-job training.

"PERFORMANCE STANDARDS

"SEC. 438. (a) CRITERIA FOR ESTABLISHING STANDARDS.—For the purpose of evaluating the success of programs established under this part and determining eligibility for additional allocations under section 432(b)(2), the Secretary of Labor, on the basis of recommendations received pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, shall establish performance standards. Such performance standards—

"(1) shall be measured by outcome and not by levels of activity or participation, and shall be based on the degree of success which may reasonably be expected of States, in carrying out work-related programs under this part which help such individuals achieve self-sufficiency and in reducing welfare costs;

"(2) shall take into account job placement rates, wages, job retention, reduced levels of aid under the State plan, improvements in the educational levels of participants, and the extent to which participants are able to obtain jobs providing health benefits or child care;

"(3) shall encourage States to give appropriate recognition to the greater difficulties in achieving self-sufficiency which face individuals who have greater barriers to employment; and

"(4) shall include guidelines permitting appropriate variations to take account of the differing conditions (including unemployment rates) which may exist in different States.

"(b) Procedures for Establishing Standards.—(1) The Secretary shall establish an advisory committee to develop proposed performance standards meeting the requirements of subsection (a). The advisory committee shall include representatives of State agencies administering programs under this part, State job training coordinating councils, labor organizations, business organizations, education agencies, community based organizations, and organizations representing eligible participants.

"(2) The proposed performance standards developed by such advisory committee shall be submitted to the Office of Technology Assessment, for a period not to exceed 30 days, for review and comment prior to their submission to the Secretary. The comments of the Office of Technology Assessment concerning the proposed performance standards shall be included with the documents submitted to the Secretary by the advisory committee.

"(3) The Secretary may collect preliminary program information from the States to assist in the development of performance standards. The Secretary shall have access to information developed pursuant to section 104(c) of the Family Welfare Reform Act of 1987 for such purpose.

"(c) Preliminary and Final Standards.—Preliminary guidelines intended to facilitate compliance with performance standards referred to in subsection (a) shall be established within 12 months after the date of the enactment of the Family Welfare Reform Act of 1987. Final standards shall be established, prescribed, and published no later than 24 months after enactment of such Act.

"(d) State-by-State Variation.—The performance standards developed and prescribed under this section shall be varied by the Governor of a State, to the extent permitted under subsection (a), to the extent necessary to take account of specific economic, geographic, and demographic factors in the State, the characteristics of the population to be served, and the types of services to be provided.

"(e) Targeting of Services.—Prior to the development of performance standards under this section, each State should take immediate action to fulfill the purposes of this part regarding the targeting of services toward those individuals who are most difficult to place in unsubsidized employment on the basis of—

"(1) work experience,

"(2) duration of welfare dependency, and

"(3) educational attainments.

"(f) Evaluations.—(1) The Secretary shall conduct evaluations of each State's progress toward meeting the performance standards developed under this section. Evaluations shall be conducted at the completion of each fiscal year for which a State may be held accountable for such standards.

"(2) If a State fails to meet the performance standards at the conclusion of any such evaluation period, the Secretary shall provide such necessary technical assistance to the State as will facilitate meeting such standards. The Secretary shall review the State's compliance within a reasonable period after providing such assistance (as determined by the Secretary and the Governor), except that such period may not exceed 6 months.

"(g) Incentive Allocations.—(1) In the case of any State which meets or exceeds the performance standards, such State shall be eligible for incentive allocations available under section 432(b)(2).

"(2) The amount of such additional allocation shall be based on the extent to which such State meets or exceeds the performance standards under performance categories established by this part. The Secretary shall determine the amounts of such incentive awards.

"(h) Review and Revision of Standards.—The Secretary shall periodically (but not more frequently than once each three years) review the performance standards developed under this section and submit recommendations for changes to the advisory committee and the Office of Technology Assessment for review and comment prior to prescribing any revisions to such standards.

"GENERAL REQUIREMENTS

"Sec. 439. (a) Refusal To Participate.—Prior to a determination pursuant to section 416(h) that an individual has refused to participate under section 416 or this part without good cause, the State work initiatives agency shall provide to such individual a notice of intent to make such determination. In no event may a final determination be made in a first such instance unless such individual has been offered an opportunity to reach a conciliatory resolution, including the opportunity to discuss reasons for the lack of cooperation and to propose options with the goal of continuing in the program under this part. The failure of a State to provide services to an individual in accordance with a family support plan developed under section 435 shall constitute one of the grounds for good cause.

"(b) Benefits and Labor Standards.—The provisions of sections 142 and 143 (relating to benefit requirements and labor standards) of the Job Training Partnership Act shall apply to all program activities under section 416 and under this part and any work program carried out under this Act.

"(c) Suitability of Work Assignments.—(1)(A) Each assignment of a participant to any program activity under section 416 or under this part, or under any work program carried out under this Act, shall be consistent with the physical capacity, skills, experience, health, family responsibilities, and place of residence of such participant. For the purposes of this part and section 416, or any work program carried out under this Act, part-time participation shall in no event exceed 20 hours per week; and no part-time participant shall be required to participate in more than one program or activity if travel to and participation therein would exceed such time.

"(B) Before assigning a participant to any activity under section 416 or under this part, or under any work program carried out under this Act, the State shall assure that—

"(i) appropriate standards for health, safety, and other conditions are applicable to participation in such activity;

"(ii) the conditions of participation in such activity are reasonable, taking into account the geographic region, the residence of the participant, and the proficiency of the participant, and the child care and other supportive service needs of the participant; and

"(iii) the participant will not be required, without his or her consent, to travel an unreasonable distance from his or her home or remain away from such home overnight.

"(2) The State may not require a participant in the program under this part or under section 416 or under any program under this Act to accept a position under the program (as work supplementation or otherwise) if accepting the position would result in the receipt of wages paid at a rate below the Federal minimum wage established by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. The State shall establish a program whereby, to prevent any loss of income to the participant as a result of the acceptance of such job, the State shall provide a supplement at a level which, when combined with wages from such job, equals the participant's benefits level while participating in the program for a period of 12 months.

"(d) Mandatory Workfare Prohibited.—Funds available under this part will not be used, directly or indirectly, to support any mandatory workfare program. As used in this subsection, the term 'mandatory workfare program' means any program under which recipients of welfare or other public assistance are to be required to perform work in exchange for such assistance, but are not to be provided wages and worker benefits in paid employment.

"(e) Nondiscrimination Provisions.—(1) The provisions of section 167 (relating to nondiscrimination) of the Job Training Partnership Act shall apply to all program activities under section 416 and under this part and any work program carried out under this Act.

"(2) Individuals assigned to any job or work program under this Act shall not be discriminated against on the basis of race, sex, national origin, religion, age, or handicapping condition, and such individuals shall have such rights as are available under any Federal, State, or local law prohibiting discrimination in employment.

"USE OF EXISTING RESOURCES

"Sec. 440. (a) Reimbursement Permitted.—In making use of the programs of other State or local agencies (public or private), a State agency may reimburse such agencies for services rendered to individuals under this part to the extent that such services and opportunities are not otherwise available on a nonreimbursable basis.

"(b) Use of Services and Information From Private Industry Councils.—(1) The State work initiatives agency shall utilize the services of each private industry council (as established under the Job Training Partnership Act) to identify and provide advice on the types of jobs available or likely to become available in the service delivery area of such council.

"(2) The State work initiatives agency shall not conduct, in any area, institutional training under any program established pursuant to section 436(a) of any type which is not related to jobs of the type which are or are likely to become available in such area as determined after taking into account information provided by the private industry council for such area.

"(c) In carrying out services and activities under this part, the State work initiatives agency may enter into appropriate contracts and other arrangements with public and private agencies and organizations for the provision or conduct of any services or activities under this part.

"REPORTS, RECORDKEEPING, AND INVESTIGATIONS

"Sec. 441. (a) Records and Reports.—(1) Each State work initiatives agency shall keep records that are sufficient to permit the preparation of reports required by this part and to permit the tracing of funds to a level of expenditure adequate to insure that the funds have not been spent unlawfully.

"(2) Each State work initiatives agency shall maintain such records and submit such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary requires regarding the performance of its programs. Such records and reports shall be submitted to the Secretary, but shall not be required to be submitted more than once each quarter unless specifically requested by the Congress or a committee thereof.

"(b) Investigations.—(1)(A) In order to evaluate compliance with the provisions of this part, the Secretary shall conduct in several States, in each fiscal year, investigations of the use of funds received by State work initiatives agencies under this Act.

"(B) In order to insure compliance with the provisions of this part, the Comptroller General of the United States may conduct investigations of the use of funds received under this part by any State agency.

"(2) In conducting any investigation under this part, the Secretary or the Comptroller General of the United States may not request the compilation of any new information not readily available to such State agency.

"(c) State Reports.—Each State work initiatives agency shall make such reports concerning its operations and expenditures as shall be prescribed by the Secretary.

"(d) Review of Complaints.—(1) Whenever the Secretary receives a complaint from any interested person which alleges, or whenever the Secretary has reason to believe, that a State work initiatives agency receiving financial assistance under this part is failing to comply with the requirements of this part or the terms of the State plan, the Secretary shall investigate the matter.

"(2) If, after such investigation, the Secretary determines that there is substantial evidence to support such allegation or belief that such a State work initiatives agency is failing to comply with such requirements, the Secretary shall, after due notice and opportunity for a hearing to such State work initiatives agency, determine whether such allegation or belief is true.

"(3) The Secretary shall conduct such investigation, and make the final determination required by paragraph (2) regarding the truth of the allegation or belief involved, not later than 120 days after receiving the complaint.

"NONCOMPLIANCE AND CORRECTIVE ACTIONS

"Sec. 442. (a) Sanctions for Noncompliance.—(1) If the Secretary of Labor concludes that any State work initiatives agency receiving funds under this part, or if the Secretary of Health and Human Services concludes that any State public assistance agency under section 416 or any other provision of this Act is failing to comply with any provision of this Act, such Secretary shall have authority to terminate or suspend financial assistance in whole or in part and to order such sanctions or corrective actions as appropriate, including the repayment of misspent funds from sources other than funds under this part and the withholding of future funding, if prior notice and an opportunity for a hearing have been given to the State.

"(2) Whenever such Secretary orders termination or suspension of financial assistance to a subgrantee or subcontractor (including any operator under a nonfinancial agreement), such Secretary shall have authority to take whatever action is necessary to enforce such order, including action directly against the subgrantee or contractor (and including requiring the primary recipient to take legal action) to reclaim misspent funds or to otherwise protect the integrity of the funds or ensure the proper operation of the program.

"(b) Remedies Not Exclusive.—The existence of remedies under this Act shall not preclude any person, who alleges that an action of a State agency violates any of the provisions of this part, from instituting a civil action or pursuing any other remedies authorized under Federal, State, or local law.

"DEMONSTRATION PROGRAMS

"Sec. 443. (a) Authorized Uses of Funds.—Funds available to the Secretary under section 432(b)(1) and (2) may be made available to States, for use in conjunction with other resources, for such purposes as—

"(1) demonstrations to test the effectiveness of arrangements under which private organizations will operate supported-work programs to place participants in full-time jobs in the private sector, with the Federal subsidy of wages not to exceed 9 months, through performance-based contracts conditioned upon retention in such private sector employment after the Federal subsidy ends;

"(2) demonstrating more effective methods of providing coordination and services to ensure long-term family self-sufficiency through community-based comprehensive family support services involving a partnership between the State work initiatives agency and community-based organizations having experience and demonstrated effectiveness in providing services; and

"(3) financial assistance to nonprofit community development corporations to demonstrate their effectiveness in creating employment opportunities for recipients and other low-income individuals.

"(b) State Demonstration Programs.—In order to encourage States to develop innovative education and training programs for children receiving aid under State plans approved under section 402, any State may establish and conduct one or more demonstration projects, targeted to such children, designed to test financial incentives and interdisciplinary approaches to reducing school dropouts, encouraging skill development, and avoiding welfare dependence; and the Secretary may make grants to States to assist in financing such projects. Demonstration projects under this paragraph shall meet such conditions and requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe, and no such project shall be conducted for a period of less than one year or more than 5 years.

"CHILD CARE REQUIREMENTS

"Sec. 444. (a) Assessment.—Prior to or in conjunction with the expenditure of funds available under section 432(a)(2) for child care for participants in the program, each State shall conduct an assessment of the adequacy and appropriateness of child care resources in the State or particular communities in the State to meet the child care needs of participants in the program and those of other families receiving family support supplements. Such assessments shall specifically address the adequacy of resources available for children in different age groups, including infants, toddlers, preschools, and school-age children.

"(b) Coordination.—In order to encourage and facilitate coordination in the delivery of child care services, each State may provide that funds to participants for child care services under section 402(g) may be available to supplement early childhood development programs within a State, including Head Start programs, preschool programs funded under chapter one of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981, schools and nonprofit child care programs (including community based organizations receiving State or local funds designated for preschool programs for handicapped children), so as to extend these programs to provide full day, full year services to children in participating families.

"(c) Training of Caregivers.—Each State shall institute a program to provide grants for training child care personnel in areas such as child growth and development, communication with families, health and safety, instruction, and administration and management. Child care personnel eligible for such training may include employees of child care centers as well as family day care providers and others meeting the standards enumerated in section 402(g)(1)(B) of this Act (as amended by title II of the Family Welfare Reform Act of 1987).

"(d) Child Care Supply.—Any State may use funds provided under this part to institute a program to provide grants to local nonprofit child care programs to establish or renovate child care centers and family day care homes which meet the standards enumerated in section 402(g)(1)(B) of this Act (as amended by title II of the Family Welfare Reform Act of 1987) and which will be used to serve participants in the other activities described in section 436, including on-site or nearby child care centers operated as part of the education, training, or employment programs, as well as other child care centers which will be used by program participants. Such grants may also be made available to local child care agencies (such as resource and referral programs) to recruit, train, and provide other essential supports to new family day care providers. These grants may also be used to assist centers and family day care providers to come into compliance with applicable health and safety standards.

"(e) Prohibition of Relaxation of Child Care Licensing Requirements.—No State shall reduce the level of standards applicable to child care provided within the State on the date of enactment of the Family Welfare Reform Act of 1987.".

"(i) each parent receiving aid pursuant to section 407 is required to accept any reasonable full- or part-time job which is offered to him or her, without regard to the amount of the parent's resulting earnings as compared to the level of the family's aid under the applicable State plan, and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(13)(A)(i) In determining the reasonable charge under paragraph (3) for procedures described in subparagraph (C) and performed in 1988, subject to subparagraph (B), the prevailing charge for such procedure for participating and nonparticipating physicians shall be the prevailing charge otherwise recognized for such procedure for 1987 reduced by 10 percent and further reduced by any additional reduction under clause (ii). "(B) In no case shall the reduction under subparagraph (A) for a procedure result in a prevailing charge in a locality for a year which is less than 80 percent of the weighted national average of such prevailing charges for such procedure for all localities in the United States for 1987.

"(C) The procedures described in this subparagraph are as follows: coronary artery bypass surgery, total hip replacement, transurethral resection of the prostate, suprapubic prostatectomy, diagnostic dilation and curettage, and carpal tunnel repair.

"(D)(i) In the case of a reduction in the reasonable charge for a physician's service under subparagraph (A), if a nonparticipating physician furnishes the service to an individual entitled to benefits under this part after the effective date of such reduction (subject to clause (iv)), the physician may not charge the individual more than the limiting charge (as defined in clause (ii)) plus (for services furnished during the 12-month period beginning on the effective date of the reduction) ½ of the amount by which the physician's maximum allowable actual charge for the service for the previous 12-month period exceeds the limiting charge.

Any individual who notifies (or causes to be notified) a home health agency of the time or date on which such a survey is scheduled to be conducted is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $2,000. The Secretary shall provide for imposition of civil money penalties under this clause in a manner similar to that for the imposition of civil money penalties under section 1128A. The Secretary shall review each State's or local agency's procedures for scheduling and conduct of annual standard surveys to assure that the State or agency has taken all reasonable steps to avoid giving notice of such a survey through the scheduling procedures and the conduct of the surveys themselves.

“(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the standard survey shall be conducted without prior notice with respect to each home health agency not later than 15 months after the date of the previous standard survey conducted under this paragraph with respect to that agency. The Statewide average interval between standard surveys of any home health agency shall not exceed 12 months.

“(B) If not otherwise conducted under subparagraph (A), a standard survey (or an abbreviated standard survey) of an agency—

“(i) may be conducted within 2 months of any change of ownership, administration, or management of the agency, and

“(ii) shall be conducted within 2 months of when a significant number of complaints have been reported with respect to the agency to the Secretary, the State, the entity responsible for the licensing of the agency, the State or local agency responsible for maintaining a toll-free hotline and investigative unit (under section 1864(a)), or any other appropriate Federal, State, or local agency.

“(C) A standard survey conducted under this paragraph with respect to a home health agency—

“(i) shall include, for a case-mix stratified sample of individuals furnished items or services by the agency—

“(I) visits to the homes of such individuals, but only with the consent of such individuals, for the purpose of evaluating (in accordance with a standardized reproducible assessment instrument (or instruments) approved by the Secretary under subsection (d)) the extent to which the quality and scope of items and services furnished by the agency attained and maintained the highest possible functional capacity of each such individual as reflected in such individual's written plan of care required under section 1861(m) and clinical records required under section 1861(o)(3); and

“(II) a survey of the quality of care and services furnished by the agency as measured by indicators of medical, nursing, and rehabilitative care;

“(ii) shall be based upon a protocol that is developed, tested, and validated by the Secretary not later than October 1, 1989; and

“(iii) shall be conducted by an individual—

“(I) who meets minimum qualifications established by the Secretary not later than July 1, 1989, and “(II) who is not serving (or has not served within the previous 2 years) as a member of the staff or as a consultant to the home health agency surveyed with respect to such agency's compliance with any condition of participation specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a) of this section.

“(D) Each home health agency that is found, under a standard survey, to have provided poor substandard care shall be subject to an extended survey to identify policies and procedures which produced such care and to determine whether the agency has complied with the conditions of participation specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) and subsection (a) of this section. The extended survey shall be conducted immediately after the standard survey (or, if not practical, not later than 2 weeks after the date of completion of the standard survey). Any other agency may, at the Secretary's or State's discretion, be subject to such an extended survey or partial extended survey.

“(E) Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as requiring an extended (or partial extended) survey as a prerequisite to imposing a sanction against an agency under subsection (e) on the basis of the findings of a standard survey.

“(d)(1) Not later than April 1, 1989, the Secretary shall designate an assessment instrument (or instruments) for use by an agency conducting surveys pursuant to subsection (c).

"(2)(A) Not later than January 1, 1991, the Secretary shall—

"(i) evaluate the assessment process,

"(ii) report to Congress on the results of such evaluation, and

"(iii) based on such evaluation, make such modifications in the assessment process as the Secretary determines are appropriate.

"(B) The Secretary shall periodically update the evaluation conducted under subparagraph (A), report the results of such update to Congress, and, based on such update, make such modifications in the assessment process as the Secretary determines are appropriate.

"(3) The Secretary shall provide for the training of State and Federal surveyors in the use of any assessment instrument (or instruments) designated under paragraph (1).".

"(2) If the Secretary determines on the basis of a standard, extended, or partial extended survey or otherwise, that a home health agency that is certified for participation under this title is no longer in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a) and determines that the deficiencies involved do not immediately jeopardize the health and safety of the individuals to whom the agency furnishes items and services, the Secretary may (for a period not to exceed 6 months) impose intermediate sanctions developed pursuant to subsection (f), in lieu of terminating the certification of the agency. If, after such a period of intermediate sanctions, the agency is still no longer in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a), the Secretary shall terminate the certification of the agency.

"(3) If the Secretary determines that a home health agency that is certified for participation under this title is in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a) but, as of a previous period, did not meet such requirements, the Secretary may provide for a civil money penalty under subsection (f)(2)(A)(i) for the days in which it finds that the agency was not in compliance with such requirements.

"(4) The Secretary may continue payments under this title with respect to a home health agency not in compliance with the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a) over a period of not longer than 6 months, if—

"(A) the State or local survey agency finds that it is more appropriate to take alternative action to assure compliance of the agency with the requirements than to terminate the certification of the agency,

"(B) the agency has submitted a plan and timetable for corrective action to the Secretary for approval and the Secretary approves the plan of corrective action, and

"(C) the agency agrees to repay to the Federal Government payments received under this subparagraph if the corrective action is not taken in accordance with the approved plan and timetable.

The Secretary shall establish guidelines for approval of corrective actions requested by home health agencies under this subparagraph.

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall develop and implement, by not later than April 1, 1989—

"(A) a range of intermediate sanctions to apply to home health agencies under the conditions described in subsection (e), and

"(B) appropriate procedures for appealing determinations relating to the imposition of such sanctions.

"(2)(A) The intermediate sanctions developed under paragraph (1) shall include—

"(i) civil money penalties (with interest) for each day of noncompliance,

"(ii) suspension of all or part of the payments to which a home health agency would otherwise be entitled under this title with respect to items and services furnished by a home health agency on or after the date on which the Secretary determines that intermediate sanctions should be imposed pursuant to subsection (e)(2), and

"(iii) the appointment of temporary management to oversee the operation of the home health agency and to protect and assure the health and safety of the individuals under the care of the agency while improvements are made in order to bring the agency into compliance with all the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) or subsection (a).

The temporary management under clause (iii) shall not be terminated until the Secretary has determined that the agency has the management capability to ensure continued compliance with all the requirements referred to in that clause.

"(B) The sanctions specified in subparagraph (A) are in addition to sanctions otherwise available under State or Federal law and shall not be construed as limiting other remedies, including any remedy available to an individual at common law.

"(C) A finding to suspend payment under subparagraph (A)(ii) shall terminate when the Secretary finds that the home health agency is in substantial compliance with all the requirements specified in or pursuant to section 1861(o) and subsection (a).

"(3) The Secretary shall develop and implement, by not later than April 1, 1989, specific procedures with respect to the conditions under which each of the intermediate sanctions developed under paragraph (1) is to be applied, including the amount of any fines and the severity of each of these sanctions. Such procedures shall be designed so as to minimize the time between identification of deficiencies and imposition of these sanctions and shall provide for the imposition of incrementally more severe fines for repeated or uncorrected deficiencies.".

(b) Effective Date.—Except as otherwise specifically provided in subsections (e) and (f) of section 1891 of the Social Security Act (as added by subsection (a)), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the first day of the 18th calendar month to begin after the date of the enactment of this Act.

"(b) Definitions of Community Nursing and Ambulatory Care and Eligible Organization.—

"(1) Community nursing and ambulatory care defined.—In this section, the term 'community nursing and ambulatory care' means the following services furnished to an individual which are, except as provided in subparagraphs (F), (G), and (H) provided on a visiting basis in a place of residence used as such individual's home:

"(H) Certain other related services listed in section 1915(c)(4)(B) to the extent the Secretary finds such services are appropriate to prevent the need for institutionalization of a patient.

"(2) Eligible organization defined.—For purposes of this section, the term 'eligible organization' means a public or private entity, organized under the laws of any State, which meets the following requirements:

"(A) The entity is primarily engaged in the direct provision of community nursing and ambulatory care.

"(B) The entity provides directly, or through arrangements with other qualified personnel, community nursing and ambulatory care.

"(C) The entity provides that all community nursing and ambulatory care is furnished by or under the supervision of a registered nurse and that all such care is furnished by qualified staff.

"(D) The entity has policies governing the furnishing of community nursing and ambulatory care that are developed by registered professional nurses.

"(E) The entity maintains clinical records on all patients.

"(F) The entity has protocols and procedures to assure, when appropriate, timely referral to or consultation with other health care providers or professionals.

"(G) The entity complies with applicable State and local laws governing the provision of community nursing and ambulatory care to patients.

"(H) The requirements of subparagraphs (B), (D), and (E) of section 1876(b)(2).

"(c) Contracts with Eligible Organizations.—

"(1) In general.—The Secretary may not enter into a contract under this section with an eligible organization unless it meets the requirements of this subsection and subsection (d) with respect to members enrolled under this section.

"(2) Basic service package.—The organization must provide to members enrolled under this section, through providers and other persons that meet the applicable requirements of this title and part A of title XI, community nursing and ambulatory care (as defined in subsection (b)(1)) which is generally available to individuals residing in the geographic area served by the organization, except that the organization may provide such members with such additional health care services as the members may elect, at their option, to have covered.

"(3) Incorporation of enrollment provisions.—Section 1876(c)(3) shall apply to eligible organizations under this section in the same manner as it applies to eligible organizations under section 1876, and, for such purpose, any reference in that section to subsection (a)(1)(A) is deemed a reference to subsection (d)(1)(A) of this section.

"(4) Availability of services.—The organization must make community nursing and ambulatory care (and such other health care services as such individuals have contracted for) available and accessible to each such individual, within the area served by the organization, with reasonable promptness and in a manner which assures continuity.

"(5) Incorporation of grievance procedures.—Section 1876(c)(5) shall apply to organizations under this section in the same manner as it applies to organizations under section 1876.

"(6) Quality assurance.—The organization must have arrangements, established in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, for an ongoing quality assurance program for health care services it provides to such individuals, which program (A) stresses health outcomes and (B) provides review by health care professionals of the process followed in the provision of such health care services.

"(d) Determination of Per Capita Payment Rates.—

"(1) In general.—(A) The Secretary shall annually determine, and shall announce (in a manner intended to provide notice to interested parties) not later than September 7 before the calendar year concerned, a per capita rate of payment for each class of individuals who are enrolled under this section with an eligible organization and who are entitled to benefits under part A and enrolled under part B.

"(B) The Secretary shall define appropriate classes of members, based on age, disability status, and such other factors as the Secretary determines to be appropriate, so as to ensure actuarial equivalence. The Secretary may add to, modify, or substitute for such classes, if such changes will improve the determination of actuarial equivalence.

"(C) The annual per capita rate of payment for each such class shall be equal to 95 percent of the adjusted average per capita cost (as defined in paragraph (3)) for that class.

"(D) In the case of an eligible organization with a contract, the Secretary shall make monthly payments in advance and in accordance with the rate determined under subparagraph (C), except as provided in subsection (e)(3)(B), to the organization for each individual enrolled with the organization under this section.

"(E) The amount of payment under this paragraph may be retroactively adjusted to take into account any difference between the actual number of individuals enrolled in the plan under this section and the number of such individuals estimated to be so enrolled in determining the amount of the advance payment.

"(2) Payments as substitute for other payments.—Payments under a contract to an eligible organization under paragraph (1) shall be instead of the amounts which (in the absence of the contract) would be otherwise payable, pursuant to sections 1814(b) and 1833(a), for services furnished by or through the organization to individuals enrolled with the organization under this section.

"(3) Adjusted average per capita cost (AAPCC) defined.—For purposes of this section, the term 'adjusted average per capita cost' means the average per capita amount that the Secretary estimates in advance (on the basis of actual experience, or retrospective actuarial equivalent based upon an adequate sample and other information and data, in a geographic area served by an eligible organization or in a similar area, with appropriate adjustments to assure actuarial equivalence) would be payable in any contract year for those services covered under parts A and B and types of expenses otherwise reimbursable under parts A and B which are described in subparagraphs (A) through (G) of subsection (b)(1) (including administrative costs incurred by organizations described in sections 1816 and 1842), if the services were to be furnished by other than an eligible organization.

"(4) Payment from medicare trust funds.—The payment to an eligible organization under this section for individuals enrolled under this section with the organization and entitled to benefits under part A and enrolled under part B shall be made from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund in such proportions from each such trust fund as the Secretary deems to be fair and equitable taking into consideration benefits attributable to parts A and B, respectively.

"(5) Exclusive source of payment.—During any period in which an individual is enrolled under this section with an eligible organization having a contract, only the eligible organization (and no other individual or person) shall be entitled to receive payments from the Secretary under this title for community nursing and ambulatory care (as defined in subsection (b)(1)) furnished to the individual.

"(6) Budget neutrality.—The Secretary may not enter into a contract with an organization under subsection (c) unless the Secretary determines that estimated total payments under this title for eligible individuals enrolled under the contract will not exceed, for benefits and administration, the amount that the Secretary reasonably estimates would have been made under this title for such individuals if the Secretary had not entered into such a contract.

"(e) Restriction on Premiums, Deductibles, Copayments, and Coinsurance.—

"(1) In general.—In no case may the portion of an eligible organization's premium rate and the actuarial value of its deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments charged (with respect to community nursing and ambulatory care) to individuals who are enrolled under this section with the organization, exceed the actuarial value of the coinsurance and deductibles that would be applicable on the average to individuals enrolled under this section with the organization (or, if the Secretary finds that adequate data are not available to determine that actuarial value, the actuarial value of the coinsurance and deductibles applicable on the average to individuals in the area, in the State, or in the United States, eligible to enroll under this section with the organization, or other appropriate data) and entitled to benefits under part A and enrolled under part B, if they were not members of an eligible organization.

"(2) Additional benefits.—If the eligible organization provides to its members enrolled under this section services in addition to community nursing and ambulatory care, election of coverage for such additional services shall be optional for such members and such organization shall furnish such members with information on the portion of its premium rate or other charges applicable to such additional services. In no case may the sum of—

"(A) the portion of such organization's premium rate charged, with respect to such additional services, to members enrolled under this section, and

"(B) the actuarial value of its deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments charged, with respect to such services to such members, exceed the adjusted community rate for such services (as defined in section 1876(e)(3)).

"(3) Additional benefits required.—(A) Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), each such contract shall provide that if—

"(i) the adjusted community rate, referred to in paragraph (2), for community nursing and ambulatory care covered under parts A and B (as reduced for the actuarial value of the coinsurance and deductibles under those parts) for members enrolled under this section with the organization, is less than

"(ii) the average of the per capita rates of payment to be made under subsection (d)(1) at the beginning of an annual contract period for members enrolled under this section with the organization,

the eligible organization shall provide to such members the additional benefits described in section 1876(g)(3) which are selected by the eligible organization and which the Secretary finds are at least equal in value to the difference between that average per capita payment and the adjusted community rate (as so reduced).

"(B) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to any organization which elects to receive a lesser payment to the extent that there is no longer a difference between the average per capita payment and adjusted community rate (as so reduced).

"(C) An organization (with the approval of the Secretary) may provide that a part of the value of such additional benefits under subparagraph (A) be withheld and reserved by the Secretary as provided in section 1876(g)(5).

"(D) If the Secretary finds that, for purposes of subparagraph (A), there is insufficient enrollment experience to determine an average of the per capita rates of payment to be made under subsection (d)(1) at the beginning of a contract period, the Secretary may determine such an average based on the enrollment experience of other contracts entered into under this section.

"(4) INCORPORATION OF RELATED PROVISIONS.—The provisions of paragraphs (3), (5), and (6) of section 1876(g) shall apply in the same manner to contracts under this section as they apply to risk-sharing contracts under section 1876, and, for this purpose, any reference in such paragraphs to paragraph (2) is deemed a reference to paragraph (3) of this subsection.

"(5) INCORPORATION OF SECONDARY PAYOR PROVISION.—Section 1876(e)(4) shall apply to eligible organizations under this section in the same manner as it applies to eligible organizations under section 1876.

"(f) INCORPORATION OF PROVISIONS RELATING TO OTHER TERMS OF CONTRACT.—Section 1876(i) shall apply to contracts under this section in the same manner as it applies to contracts under section 1876, and, for such purpose, any reference to subsection (e) is deemed a reference to subsection (d) of this section.".

"(iii) CHARGES FOR ADDITIONAL SERVICES REQUESTED.—Subparagraph (A)(iii) shall not be construed as preventing a facility from charging a resident, eligible for medical assistance under the State plan, for items or services the resident has requested and received and that are not specified in the State plan as included in the term 'nursing facility services'.

"(2) is mentally retarded (as defined in subsection (f)(4)(G)(ii)) unless the State mental retardation or developmental disability authority has determined prior to admission that, because of the physical and mental condition of the individual, the individual requires the level of services provided by a nursing facility, and, if the individual requires such level of services, whether the individual requires active treatment for mental retardation.

The facility must make a copy of any such determination part of the resident's clinical records.

"(e) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO ADMINISTRATION AND OTHER MATTERS.—

"(1) ADMINISTRATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A nursing facility must be administered in a manner that enables it to use its resources effectively and efficiently to attain and maintain the highest possible physical and mental health and psychosocial well-being of each resident (consistent with any criteria the Secretary establishes under subsection (g)(4)).

"(B) REQUIRED NOTICES.—If a change occurs in—

"(i) the persons with an ownership or control interest (as defined in section 1124(a)(3)) in the facility,

"(i) the Secretary may waive, for such periods as he deems appropriate, specific provisions of such Code which if rigidly applied would result in unreasonable hardship upon a facility, but only if such waiver would not adversely affect the health and safety of residents or personnel, and

"(ii) the provisions of such Code shall not apply in any State if the Secretary finds that in such State there is in effect a fire and safety code, imposed by State law, which adequately protects residents of and personnel in nursing facilities.

"(3) SANITARY AND INFECTION CONTROL AND PHYSICAL ENVIRONMENT.—A nursing facility must—

"(A) establish and maintain an infection control program designed to provide a safe, sanitary, and comfortable environment in which residents reside and to help prevent the development and transmission of disease and infection, and

"(4) MISCELLANEOUS.—

"(A) COMPLIANCE WITH FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL LAWS AND PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS.—A nursing facility must operate and provide services in compliance with all applicable Federal, State, and local laws and regulations (including the requirements of sections 1124 and 1902(a)(13)(A)) and with all accepted professional standards and principles which apply to professionals providing services in such a facility.

"(B) OTHER.—A nursing facility must meet such other requirements relating to the health and safety of residents or relating to the physical facilities thereof as the Secretary may find necessary, which may include any of the conditions described in section 1861(j)(15).

"(f) State Plan Requirements Relating to Nursing Facility Requirements.—

"(1) Specification of nurse training programs and establishment of nurse aide registry.—

"(A) Specification of nurse aide training programs.—Each State, as a condition of approval of its plan under this title, must specify, by not later than January 1, 1989, those nurse aide training programs that the State recognizes and approves for purposes of subsection (b)(5) and that meet the minimum standards established under subsection (g)(2), but the failure of the Secretary to establish such standards shall not relieve any State of its responsibility under this paragraph. The State may not provide for the recognition and approval of a program—

"(i) offered by or in a nursing facility which has been determined to be out of compliance with the requirements of subsection (b), (c), (d), or (e) within the previous 2 years, or

"(ii) offered by a nursing facility unless the State makes the determination, upon an individual's completion of the program, that the individual is competent to provide nursing or nursing-related services in nursing facilities, and the State may not delegate this responsibility to the facility.

"(B) Nurse aide registry.—Each State, as a condition of approval of its plan under this title, must establish, by not later than January 1, 1989, and maintain a registry of all individuals who have satisfactorily completed a nurse aide training program approved under subparagraph (A) in the State. The registry must meet minimum requirements established by the Secretary under subsection (g)(2)(B), but failure of the Secretary to issue final regulations shall not relieve the State from its responsibility to establish and maintain a registry under this subparagraph.

"(2) Notice of medicaid rights.—Each State, as a condition of approval of its plan under this title, effective April 1, 1988, must develop (and periodically update) a written notice of the rights and obligations of residents of nursing facilities (and spouses of such residents) under this title. Such notice shall include a description of the provisions of section 1922 (relating to protection of income and resources of community spouses).

"(3) State appeals process for involuntary transfers.—Each State, as a condition of approval of its plan under this title, effective for transfers from nursing facilities effected on or after October 1, 1989, must provide for a fair mechanism for hearing appeals on involuntary transfers of residents of such facilities. Such mechanism must meet any guidelines established by the Secretary under subsection (g)(3); but the failure of the Secretary to establish such guidelines shall not relieve any State of its responsibility to provide for such a fair mechanism.

"(4) State requirements for preadmission screening and resident review.—

"(A) Preadmission screening.—Each State, as a condition of approval of its plan under this title, effective January 1, 1989, must have in effect a preadmission screening program, for making determinations (using any criteria developed under subsection (g)(5)) described in subsection (d) for mentally ill and mentally retarded individuals (as defined in subparagraph (G)) who are admitted to nursing facilities on or after January 1, 1989. The failure of the Secretary to develop minimum criteria under subsection (g)(5) shall not relieve any State of its responsibility to have a preadmission screening program under this subparagraph or to perform resident reviews under subparagraph (B).

"(B) State requirement for annual resident review.—

"(i) For mentally ill residents.—As a condition of approval of a State plan under this title, as of April 1, 1990, in the case of each resident of a nursing facility who is mentally ill, the State mental health authority must review and determine (using any criteria developed under subsection (g)(5))—

"(I) whether or not the resident, because of the resident's physical and mental condition, requires the level of services provided by a nursing facility or requires the level of services of an inpatient psychiatric hospital for individuals under age 21 (as described in section 1905(h)) or of an institution for mental diseases providing medical assistance to individuals 65 years of age or older; and

"(II) whether or not the resident requires active treatment for mental illness.

"(ii) For mentally retarded residents.—As a condition of approval of a State plan under this title, as of April 1, 1990, in the case of each resident of a nursing facility who is mentally retarded, the State mental retardation or developmental disability authority must review and determine (using any criteria developed under subsection (g)(5))—

"(I) whether or not the resident, because of the resident's physical and mental condition, requires the level of services provided by a nursing facility or requires the level of services of an intermediate care facility described under section 1905(d); and

"(II) whether or not the resident requires active treatment for mental retardation.

"(iii) Frequency of reviews.—

"(I) Annual.—Except as provided in subclauses (II) and (III), the reviews and determinations under clauses (i) and (ii) must be conducted with respect to each mentally ill or mentally retarded resident not less often than annually.

"(II) Preadmission review cases.—In the case of a resident subject to a preadmission review under subsection (d), the review and determination under clause (i) or (ii) need not be done until the resident has resided in the nursing facility for 1 year.

"(III) Initial review.—The reviews and determinations under clauses (i) and (ii) must first be conducted (for each resident not subject to preadmission review under subsection (d)) by not later than April 1, 1990.

"(C) Response to preadmission screening and resident review.—As a condition of approval of a State plan, as of April 1, 1990, the State must meet the following requirements:

"(i) Long-term residents not requiring nursing facility services, but requiring active treatment.—In the case of a resident who is determined, under subparagraph (B), not to require the level of services provided by a nursing facility, but to require active treatment for mental illness or mental retardation, and who has continuously resided in a nursing facility for at least 30 months before the date of the determination, the State must, in consultation with the resident's family or legal representative and care-givers—

"(I) inform the resident of the institutional and noninstitutional alternatives covered under the State plan for the resident,

"(II) offer the resident the choice of remaining in the facility or of receiving covered services in an alternative appropriate institutional or noninstitutional setting,

"(III) clarify the effect on eligibility for services under the State plan if the resident chooses to leave the facility (including its effect on readmission to the facility), and

"(IV) regardless of the resident's choice, provide for (or arrange for the provision of) such active treatment for the mental illness or mental retardation.

A State shall not be denied payment under this title for nursing facility services for a resident described in this clause because the resident does not require the level of services provided by such a facility, if the resident chooses to remain in such a facility.

"(ii) Other residents not requiring nursing facility services, but requiring active treatment.—In the case of a resident who is determined, under subparagraph (B), not to require the level of services provided by a nursing facility, but to require active treatment for mental illness or mental retardation, and who has not continuously resided in a nursing facility for at least 30 months before the date of the determination, the State must, in consultation with the resident's family or legal representative and care-givers—

"(I) arrange for the safe and orderly discharge of the resident from the facility,

"(II) prepare and orient the resident for such discharge, and

"(III) provide for (or arrange for the provision of) such active treatment for the mental illness or mental retardation.

"(iii) Residents not requiring nursing facility services and not requiring active treatment.—In the case of a resident who is determined, under subparagraph (B), not to require the level of services provided by a nursing facility and not to require active treatment for mental illness or mental retardation, the State must—

"(I) arrange for the safe and orderly discharge of the resident from the facility, and

"(II) prepare and orient the resident for such discharge.

"(D) Denial of payment where failure to conduct preadmission screening.—No payment may be made under section 1903(a) with respect to nursing facility services furnished to an individual for whom a determination is required under subsection (d) or subparagraph (B) but for whom the determination is not made.

"(E) Permitting alternative disposition plans.—With respect to residents of a nursing facility who are mentally retarded or mentally ill and who are determined under subparagraph (B) not to require the level of services of such a facility, but who require active treatment for mental illness or mental retardation, a State and the nursing facility shall be considered to be in compliance with the requirement of this paragraph if, before October 1, 1988, the State and the Secretary have entered into an agreement relating to the disposition of such residents of the facility and the State is in compliance with such agreement. Such an agreement may provide for the disposition of the residents after the date specified in subparagraph (C).

"(F) Appeals procedures.—Each State, as a condition of approval of its plan under this title, effective January 1, 1989, must have in effect an appeals process for individuals adversely affected by determinations under subparagraph (A) or (B).

"(G) Definitions.—In this paragraph and subsection (d):

"(i) An individual is considered to be 'mentally ill' if the individual has a primary or secondary diagnosis of mental disorder (as defined in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 3rd edition).

"(ii) An individual is considered to be 'mentally retarded' if the individual is mentally retarded or a person with a related condition (as described in section 1905(d)).

"(iii) The term 'active treatment' has the meaning given such term by the Secretary in regulations.

"(g) Responsibilities of Secretary Relating to Nursing Facility Requirements.—

"(1) Responsibility.—It is the duty and responsibility of the Secretary to assure that requirements which govern the provision of care in nursing facilities under State plans approved under this title, and the enforcement of such requirements, are adequate to protect the health and safety of residents and to promote the effective and efficient use of public moneys.

"(2) Establishment of minimum nurse aide training standards and registry standards.—

"(A) Nurse aide training standards.—For purposes of subsections (b)(5) and (f)(1)(A), the Secretary shall establish, by July 1, 1988, minimum standards for nurse aide training programs for nurse aides, including the content of the curriculum, minimum hours of training, qualifications of instructors, and procedures for determination of competency. Such standards may permit recognition of programs offered by or in facilities, as well as outside facilities (including employee organizations), and of programs in effect on the date of the enactment of this section. Such standards shall permit a State to find that an individual who has completed (before January 1, 1989) a nurse aide training program shall be deemed to have completed such a program approved under subsection (b)(5) if the State determines that, at the time the program was offered, the program met the requirements for approval under such subsection.

"(B) Registry standards.—The Secretary shall establish, by July 1, 1988, minimum standards for the establishment and maintenance of registries under subsection (f)(2)(B). Such standards shall provide for the inclusion of documented findings of resident neglect or abuse involving individuals listed in the registry.

"(3) Federal guidelines.—For purposes of subsections (c)(2)(B)(iii) and (f)(3), by not later than October 1, 1988, the Secretary shall establish guidelines for minimum standards State appeals processes under subsection (f)(3) must meet to provide a fair mechanism for hearing appeals on involuntary transfers of residents from nursing facilities.

"(4) Criteria for administration.—The Secretary shall establish criteria for assessing a nursing facility's compliance with the requirement of subsection (e)(1) with respect to—

(B) by amending paragraph (28) to read as follows:

"(28) provide—

"(A) that any nursing facility receiving payments under such plan must satisfy all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e) of section 1922 as they apply to such facilities;

The Secretary shall, not later than September 30, 1989, review each such plan amendment for compliance with such requirement and by such date shall approve or disapprove each such amendment. If the Secretary disapproves such an amendment, the State shall immediately submit a revised amendment which meets such requirement. The absence of approval of such a plan amendment does not relieve the State or any nursing facility of any obligation or requirement under title XIX of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act).

"(2) State specification of instrument.—As a condition of approval of its State plan and effective July 1, 1990, each State shall specify the instrument to be used by nursing facilities in the State in complying with the requirements of subsection (b)(3). Such instrument shall be—

"(1) STATE AND FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY.—Under each State plan under this title, the State shall be responsible for certifying, in accordance with surveys conducted under paragraph (2), the compliance of nursing facilities (other than public facilities) with the requirements of subsections (b) through (e). The Secretary shall be responsible for certifying, in accordance with surveys conducted under paragraph (2), the compliance of public nursing facilities with the requirements of such subsections.

"(2) SURVEYS.—

"(A) ANNUAL STANDARD SURVEY.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Each nursing facility shall be subject to an annual standard survey, to be conducted without any prior notice to the facility. Any individual who notifies (or causes to be notified) a nursing facility of the time or date on which such a survey is scheduled to be conducted is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $2,000. The Secretary shall provide for imposition of civil money penalties under this clause in a manner similar to that for the imposition of civil money penalties under section 1128A. The Secretary shall review each State's procedures for scheduling and conduct of annual standard surveys to assure that the State has taken all reasonable steps to avoid giving notice of such a survey through the scheduling procedures and the conduct of the surveys themselves.

"(ii) CONTENTS.—Each standard survey shall include, for a case-mix stratified sample of residents—

"(I) a survey of the quality of care furnished, as measured by indicators of medical, nursing, and rehabilitative care, dietary and nutrition services, activities and social participation, and sanitation, infection control, and the physical environment, and

"(II) an audit of the residents' assessments and written plans of care provided under subsection (b)(3) to determine the accuracy of such assessments and the adequacy of such plans of care.

"(iii) FREQUENCY.—

"(I) IN GENERAL.—Each nursing facility shall be subject to a standard survey not later than 15 months after the date of the previous standard survey under this subparagraph. The Statewide average interval between standard surveys of a nursing facility shall not exceed 12 months.

"(II) SPECIAL SURVEYS.—If not otherwise conducted under subclause (I), a standard survey (or an abbreviated standard survey) may be conducted within 2 months of any change of ownership, administration, management of a nursing facility, or director of nursing in order to determine whether the change has resulted in any decline in the quality of care furnished in the facility.

"(B) EXTENDED SURVEYS.—Each nursing facility which is found, under a standard survey, to have provided substandard quality of care shall be subject to an extended survey to identify policies and procedures which produced such quality and to determine whether the facility has complied with the requirements described in subsections (b) through (e). The extended survey shall be conducted immediately after the standard survey (or, if not practical, not later than 2 weeks after the date of completion of the standard survey). Any other facility may, at the Secretary's or State's discretion, be subject to such an extended survey (or a partial extended survey). Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as requiring an extended or partial extended survey as a prerequisite to imposing a sanction against a facility under subsection (j) on the basis of findings in a standard survey.

"(C) SURVEY PROTOCOL.—Standard and extended surveys shall be conducted—

"(i) based upon a protocol which the Secretary has developed, tested, and validated by not later than April 1, 1990, and

"(ii) by individuals who meet such minimum qualifications as the Secretary establishes by not later than April 1, 1990.

The failure of the Secretary to develop, test, or validate such protocols or to establish such minimum qualifications shall not relieve any State of its responsibility (or the Secretary of the Secretary's responsibility) to conduct surveys under this subsection.

"(D) CONSISTENCY OF SURVEYS.—Each State shall implement programs to measure and reduce inconsistency in the application of survey results among surveyors.

"(E) PROHIBITION OF CONFLICTS OF INTEREST.—A State may not use as a surveyor under this subsection an individual who is serving (or has served within the previous 2 years) as a member of the staff of, or as a consultant to, the facility surveyed respecting compliance with the requirements of subsections (b) through (e).

"(F) TRAINING SURVEYORS IN USE OF ASSESSMENT INSTRUMENTS.—The Secretary shall provide for the training of State and Federal surveyors in the use of the assessment instruments designated under subsection (h)(1).

"(3) VALIDATION SURVEYS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct onsite surveys of a representative sample of nursing facilities in each State, within 2 months of the date of surveys conducted under paragraph (2) by the State, in a sufficient number to allow inferences about the adequacies of each State's surveys conducted under paragraph (2). In conducting such surveys, the Secretary shall use the same survey protocols as the State is required to use under paragraph (2). If the State has determined that an individual nursing facility meets the requirements of subsections (b) through (e), but the Secretary determines that the facility does not meet such requirements, the Secretary's determination as to the facility's not meeting such requirements is binding and supersedes that of the State survey.

"(B) REDUCTION IN ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS FOR SUBSTANDARD PERFORMANCE.—If the Secretary finds, on the basis of such surveys, that a State's survey and certification performance is not adequate, the Secretary shall provide for a reduction of the payment otherwise made to the State under section 1903(a)(2)(D) with respect to a quarter equal to 33 percent multiplied by a fraction, the denominator of which is equal to the total number of residents in nursing facilities surveyed by the Secretary that quarter and the numerator of which is equal to the total number of residents in nursing facilities which were found pursuant to such surveys to be not in compliance with any of the requirements of subsections (b) through (e). A State that is dissatisfied with the Secretary's findings under this subparagraph may obtain reconsideration and review of the findings under section 1116 in the same manner as a State may seek reconsideration and review under that section of the Secretary's determination under section 1116(a)(1).

"(C) SPECIAL SURVEYS OF COMPLIANCE.—Where the Secretary has reason to question the compliance of a nursing facility with any of the requirements of subsections (b) through (e), the Secretary may conduct a survey of the facility and, on that basis, make independent and binding determinations concerning the extent to which the nursing facility meets such requirements.

"(4) INVESTIGATION OF COMPLAINTS AND MONITORING COMPLIANCE.—Each State shall maintain procedures and adequate staff to—

"(A) investigate complaints of violations of requirements by nursing facilities, and

"(B) monitor, on-site, on a daily or other regular basis a nursing facility's compliance with the requirements of subsections (b) through (e) if—

"(i) the facility has been found not to be in compliance with such requirements and is in the process of correcting deficiencies to achieve such compliance;

"(ii) the facility was previously found not to be in compliance with such requirements, has corrected deficiencies to achieve such compliance, and verification of continue compliance is indicated; or

"(iii) the State has reason to question the compliance of the facility with such requirements.

"(5) DISCLOSURE OF RESULTS OF INSPECTIONS AND ACTIVITIES.—

"(A) PUBLIC INFORMATION.—Each State, and the Secretary, shall make available to the public—

"(i) information respecting all surveys and certifications made respecting nursing facilities,

"(ii) copies of cost reports of such facilities filed under this title or under title XVIII,

"(iii) copies of statements of ownership under section 1124, and

"(iv) information supplied under section 1902(a)(38).

"(B) NOTICE TO OMBUDSMAN.— Each State shall notify the State long-term care ombudsman (established under section 307(a)(12) of the Older Americans Act of 1965) of the State's findings of noncompliance with any of the requirements of subsections (b) through (e), with respect to a nursing facility in the State.

"(C) NOTICE TO PHYSICIANS AND NURSING FACILITY ADMINISTRATOR LICENSING BOARD.—If a State finds that a nursing facility has provided substandard quality of care, the State shall notify—

"(i) the attending physician of each resident with respect to which such finding is made, and

"(ii) any State board responsible for the licensing of the nursing facility administrator of the facility.

"(D) ACCESS TO FRAUD CONTROL UNITS.—Each State shall provide its State medicaid fraud and abuse control unit (established under section 1903(q)) with access to all information of the State agency responsible for surveys and certifications under this subsection.".

(b) INCREASING MATCHING PERCENTAGE FOR NURSING HOME SURVEY AND CERTIFICATION ACTIVITIES.—(1) Section 1903(a)(2) (42 U.S.C. 1396b(a)(2)), as amended by section 4111(c) of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) for each calendar quarter during—

"(i) fiscal year 1990, an amount equal to 90 percent,

"(ii) fiscal year 1991, an amount equal to 85 percent,

"(iii) fiscal year 1992, an amount equal to 80 percent, and

"(iv) fiscal year 1993 and thereafter, an amount equal to 75 percent, of so much of the sums expended during such quarter (as found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan) as are attributable to State activities under section 1922(i); plus".

(2) Section 1903(r) (42 U.S.C. 1396b(r)) is amended by striking "paragraphs (2)" each place it appears and inserting "paragraphs (2)(A)".

(3) For purposes of section 1903(a) of the Social Security Act, proper expenses incurred by a State for medical review by independent professionals of the care provided to residents of nursing facilities who are entitled to medical assistance under title XIX of such Act shall be reimbursable as expenses necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan under that title.

"(j) Enforcement Process.—

"(1) In general.—If a State finds, on the basis of a standard, extended, or partial extended survey under subsection (i)(2) or otherwise, that a nursing facility no longer meets a requirement of subsection (b), (c), (d), or (e) and further finds that the facility's deficiencies—

"(A) immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, the State shall take immediate action to remove the jeopardy and correct the deficiencies through the remedy specified in paragraph (2)(A)(iii), or terminate the facility's participation under the State plan and may provide, in addition, for one or more of the other remedies described in paragraph (2); or

"(B) do not immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, the State may terminate the facility's participation under the State plan and may provide, in addition, for one or more of the remedies described in paragraph (2).

Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as restricting the remedies available to a State to remedy a nursing facility's deficiencies. If a State finds that a nursing facility meets such requirements but, as of a previous period, did not meet such requirements, the State may provide for a civil money penalty under paragraph (2)(A)(i) for the days in which it finds that the facility was not in compliance with such requirements.

"(2) Specified remedies.—

"(A) Listing.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B)(ii), each State shall establish by law (whether statute or regulation) at least the following remedies:

"(i) Denial of payment under the State plan with respect to any individual admitted to the nursing facility involved after such notice to the public and to the facility as may be provided for by the State.

"(ii) A civil money penalty assessed and collected, with interest, for each day in which the facility is or was out of compliance with a requirement of subsection (b), (c), (d), or (e), or regulations or guidelines under such a subsection. Funds collected by a State as a result of imposition of such a penalty (or as a result of the imposition by the State of a civil money penalty for activities described in subsections (h)(4)(A), (h)(4)(B), or (i)(2)(A)(i)) shall be applied to the protection of the health or property of residents of nursing facilities that the State or the Secretary finds deficient, including payment for the costs of relocation of residents to other facilities, maintenance of operation of a facility pending correction of deficiencies or closure, and reimbursement of residents for personal funds lost.

"(iii) The appointment of temporary management to oversee the operation of the facility and to assure the health and safety of the facility's residents, where there is a need for temporary management while—

"(I) there is an orderly closure of the facility, or

"(II) improvements are made in order to bring the facility into compliance with all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e).

The temporary management under this clause shall not be terminated under subclause (II) until the State has determined that the facility has the management capability to ensure continued compliance with all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e).

"(iv) The authority, in the case of an emergency, to close the facility, to transfer residents in that facility to other facilities, or both.

"(B) Deadline and guidance.—(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), as a condition for approval of a State plan for calendar quarters beginning on or after October 1, 1989, each State shall establish the remedies described in clauses (i) through (iv) of subparagraph (A) by not later than October 1, 1989. The Secretary shall provide, through regulations or otherwise by not later than October 1, 1988, guidance to States in establishing such remedies; but the failure of the Secretary to provide such guidance shall not relieve a State of the responsibility for establishing such remedies.

"(ii) A State may establish alternative remedies (other than termination of participation) other than those described in clauses (i) through (iv) of subparagraph (A), if the State demonstrates to the Secretary's satisfaction that the alternative remedies are as effective in deterring noncompliance and correcting deficiencies as those described in subparagraph (A).

"(C) Funding.—The reasonable expenditures of a State to provide for temporary management and other expenses associated with implementing the remedies described in clauses (iii) and (iv) of subparagraph (A) shall be considered, for purposes of section 1903(a)(7), to be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan.

"(D) Assuring prompt compliance.—If a nursing facility has not complied with any of the requirements of subsections (b) through (e) within 3 months after the date the facility is found to be out of compliance with such requirements, the State shall impose the remedy described in subparagraph (A)(i) for all individuals who are admitted to the facility after such date.

"(E) Repeated noncompliance.—In the case of a nursing facility which, on 3 consecutive standard surveys conducted under subsection (i)(2), has been found to have provided substandard quality of care, the State shall (regardless of what other remedies are provided)—

"(i) impose the remedy described in subparagraph (A)(i), and

"(ii) monitor the facility under subsection (i)(4)(B), until the facility has demonstrated, to the satisfaction of the State, that it is in compliance with the requirements of subsections (b) through (e) and that it will remain in compliance with such requirements.

"(F) INCENTIVES FOR HIGH QUALITY CARE.—In addition to the remedies specified in this paragraph, a State may establish a program to reward, through public recognition, incentive payments, or both, nursing facilities that provide the highest quality care to residents who are entitled to medical assistance under this title. For purposes of section 1903(a)(7), proper expenses incurred by a State in carrying out such a program shall be considered to be expenses necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan under this title.

"(3) SECRETARIAL AUTHORITY.—

"(A) FOR STATE NURSING FACILITIES.—With respect to a State nursing facility, the Secretary shall have the authority and duties of a State under this subsection, including the authority to impose remedies described in paragraph (2)(A) (other than clause (iv) thereof).

"(B) OTHER NURSING FACILITIES.—With respect to any other nursing facility in a State, if the Secretary finds that a nursing facility no longer meets a requirement of subsection (b), (c), (d), or (e) and further finds that the facility's deficiencies—

"(i) immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, the Secretary shall take immediate action to remove the jeopardy and correct the deficiencies through the remedy specified in subparagraph (C)(iii), or terminate the facility's participation under the State plan and may provide, in addition, for one or more of the other remedies described in subparagraph (C); or

"(ii) do not immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, the Secretary may impose any of the remedies described in subparagraph (C).

Nothing in this subparagraph shall be construed as restricting the remedies available to the Secretary to remedy a nursing facility's deficiencies. If the Secretary finds that a nursing facility meets such requirements but, as of a previous period, did not meet such requirements, the Secretary may provide for a civil money penalty under subparagraph (C)(ii) for the days on which he finds that the facility was not in compliance with such requirements.

"(C) SPECIFIED REMEDIES.—The Secretary may take the following actions with respect to a finding that a facility has not met an applicable requirement:

"(i) DENIAL OF PAYMENT.—The Secretary may deny any further payments to the State for medical assistance furnished by the facility to all individuals in the facility or to individuals admitted to the facility after the effective date of the finding.

"(ii) AUTHORITY WITH RESPECT TO CIVIL MONEY PENALTIES.—The Secretary may impose a civil money penalty in an amount not to exceed $10,000 for each day of noncompliance and the Secretary shall impose and collect such a penalty in the same manner as civil money penalties are imposed and collected under section 1128A.

"(iii) APPOINTMENT OF TEMPORARY MANAGEMENT.—In consultation with the State, the Secretary may appoint temporary management to oversee the operation of the facility and to assure the health and safety of the facility's residents, where there is a need for temporary management while—

"(I) there is an orderly closure of the facility, or

"(II) improvements are made in order to bring the facility into compliance with all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e).

The temporary management under this clause shall not be terminated under subclause (II) until the Secretary has determined that the facility has the management capability to ensure continued compliance with all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e).

"(D) CONTINUATION OF PAYMENTS PENDING REMEDIATION.—The Secretary may continue payments under section 1903(a) with respect to a nursing facility not in compliance with a requirement of subsection (b), (c), (d), or (e), over a period of not longer than 6 months, if—

"(i) the State survey agency finds that it is more appropriate to take alternative action to assure compliance of the facility with the requirements than to terminate the certification of the facility,

"(ii) the State has submitted a plan and timetable for corrective action to the Secretary for approval and the Secretary approves the plan of corrective action, and

"(iii) the State agrees to repay to the Federal Government payments received under this subparagraph if the corrective action is not taken in accordance with the approved plan and timetable.

The Secretary shall establish guidelines for approval of corrective actions requested by States under this subparagraph.

"(4) EFFECTIVE PERIOD OF DENIAL OF PAYMENT.—A finding to deny payment under this subsection shall terminate when the State or Secretary (or both, as the case may be) finds that the facility is in substantial compliance with all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e).

"(5) IMMEDIATE TERMINATION OF PARTICIPATION FOR FACILITY WHERE STATE OR SECRETARY FINDS NONCOMPLIANCE AND IMMEDIATE JEOPARDY.—If either the State or the Secretary finds that a nursing facility has not met a requirement of subsection (b), (c), (d), or (e) and finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, the State and the Secretary shall notify the other of such finding, and the State or the Secretary, respectively, shall take immediate action to remove the jeopardy and correct the deficiencies through the remedy specified in paragraph (2)(A)(iii) or (3)(C)(iii), or terminate the facility's participation under the State plan. If the facility's participation in the State plan is terminated by either the State or the Secretary, the State shall provide for the safe and orderly transfer of the residents eligible under the State plan consistent with the requirements of subsection (c)(2).

"(6) SPECIAL RULES WHERE STATE AND SECRETARY DO NOT AGREE ON FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—

"(A) STATE FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE AND NO SECRETARIAL FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the Secretary finds that a nursing facility has met all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e), but a State finds that the facility has not met such requirements and the failure does not immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, the State's findings shall control and the remedies imposed by the State shall be applied.

"(B) SECRETARIAL FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE AND NO STATE FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the Secretary finds that a nursing facility has not met all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e) and that the failure does not immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, but the State has not made such a finding, the Secretary—

"(i) may impose any remedies specified in paragraph (3)(C) with respect to the facility, and

"(ii) shall (pending any termination by the Secretary) permit continuation of payments in accordance with paragraph (3)(D).

"(7) SPECIAL RULES FOR TIMING OF TERMINATION OF PARTICIPATION WHERE REMEDIES OVERLAP.—

"(A) STATE AND SECRETARIAL FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE AND TERMINATION, BUT NO IMMEDIATE JEOPARDY, TIMING LEFT UP TO STATE.—If—

"(i) both the Secretary and the State find that a nursing facility has not met all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e),

"(ii) neither finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, and

"(iii) both find that the facility's participation under the State plan should be terminated, the State's timing of any termination shall control so long as the termination date does not occur later than 6 months after the date of the finding to terminate.

"(B) STATE AND SECRETARIAL FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE, SECRETARIAL FINDING TO TERMINATE, BUT NO IMMEDIATE JEOPARDY, TEMPORARY DEFERRAL TO STATE.—If—

"(i) both the Secretary and the State find that a nursing facility has not met all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e),

"(ii) neither finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, and

"(iii) the Secretary, but not the State, finds that the facility's participation under the State plan should be terminated, the Secretary shall (pending any termination by the Secretary) permit continuation of payments in accordance with paragraph (3)(D).

"(C) STATE AND SECRETARIAL FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE, STATE FINDING TO TERMINATE, BUT NO IMMEDIATE JEOPARDY, TIMING UP TO STATE.—If—

"(i) both the Secretary and the State find that a nursing facility has not met all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e),

"(ii) neither finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, and

"(iii) the State, but not the Secretary, finds that the facility's participation under the State plan should be terminated, the State's decision to terminate, and timing of such termination, shall control.

"(8) STATE AND SECRETARIAL FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE, BUT NO IMMEDIATE JEOPARDY, IMPOSITION OF ALTERNATIVE OR ADDITIONAL REMEDIES.—

"(A) ONE PARTY FINDS ADDITIONAL REMEDY.—If—

"(i) both the Secretary and the State find that a nursing facility has not met all the requirements of subsections (b) through (e),

"(ii) neither finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, and

"(iii) the Secretary or the State, but not both, establishes one or more remedies which are additional or alternative to the remedy of terminating the facility's participation under the State plan, such additional or alternative remedies shall also be applied.

"(B) OVERLAPPING ADDITIONAL OR ALTERNATIVE REMEDIES.—If—

"(i) both the Secretary and the State find that a nursing facility has not met the requirements of subsections (b) through (e),

"(ii) neither finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, and "(iii) both the Secretary and the State establish one or more remedies which are additional or alternative to the remedy of terminating the facility's participation under the State plan, only the additional or alternative remedies of the Secretary shall apply.

"(9) CONSTRUCTION.—The remedies provided under this subsection are in addition to those otherwise available under State or Federal law and shall not be construed as limiting such other remedies, including any remedy available to an individual at common law. The remedies described in clauses (i), (iii), and (iv) of paragraph (2)(A) may be imposed during the pendency of any hearing.

"(10) SHARING OF INFORMATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all information concerning nursing facilities required by this section to be filed with the Secretary or a State agency shall be made available to Federal or State employees for purposes consistent with the effective administration of programs established under this title and title XVIII, including investigations by State medicaid fraud control units.".

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(q)(1)(A) In order to meet the requirement of this paragraph for purposes of subsection (a)(50), the State plan must provide that, in the case of an institutionalized, non-SSI individual or couple described in subparagraph (B), in determining the amount of the individual's or couple's income to be applied monthly to payment for the cost of care in an institution, there shall be deducted from the monthly income (in addition to other allowances otherwise provided under the State plan) a monthly personal needs allowance—

"(i) which is reasonable in amount for clothing and other personal needs of the individual (or couple) while in an institution, and

"(ii) which is not less (and may be greater) than the minimum monthly personal needs allowance described in paragraph (2).

"(B) a subsequent year, is equal to the allowance established under this paragraph for the months in the previous year increased by the applicable percentage increase (as defined in section 215(i)) effective in December of the previous year; except that any such allowance determined under subparagraph (B), if not a multiple of $1, shall be rounded to the next highest multiple of $1.

"(3) Paragraphs (10) and (17) of subsection (a) shall not be construed as requiring individuals who are entitled to supplemental security income payments under title XVI to have their personal needs allowance determined under this subsection in a manner comparable to that provided to institutionalized, non-SSI individuals and couples.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendments made by this subsection (a) apply (except as provided under paragraph (2)) to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1988, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendments have been promulgated by such date.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by this section, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4116. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) NEW REQUIREMENTS AND SURVEY AND CERTIFICATION PROCESS.—Except as otherwise specifically provided in section 1922 of the Social Security Act, the amendments made by sections 4111 and 4113 (relating to nursing facility requirements and survey and certification requirements) shall apply to nursing facility services furnished on or after October 1, 1989, without regard to whether regulations to implement such amendments are promulgated by such date; except that section 1902(a)(28)(B) of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 4111(b) of this Act), relating to requiring State medical assistance plans to specify the services included in nursing facility services, shall apply to calendar quarters beginning more than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, without regard to whether regulations to implement such section are promulgated by such date.

(b) DESIGNATION OF RESIDENT ASSESSMENT INSTRUMENT AND ENFORCEMENT.—(1) Except as otherwise specifically provided in section 1922 of the Social Security Act and except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by sections 4112 and 4114 of this Act apply to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after the date of the enactment of this Act, without regard to whether regulations to implement such amendments are promulgated by such date.

(2) In applying the amendments made by section 4114 for services furnished before October 1, 1989—

Subpart B—Other Provisions

SEC. 4121. MEDICALLY NEEDY INCOME LEVELS FOR CERTAIN 2-MEMBER COUPLES IN CALIFORNIA.

For purposes of section 1903(f)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act, for payments made to California on or after July 1, 1983, in the case of a family consisting only of two individuals both of whom are adults and at least one of whom is aged, blind, or disabled, the "highest amount which would ordinarily be paid to a family of the same size" under the State's plan approved under part A of title IV of such Act shall, at California's option, be the amount determined by the State agency to be the amount of the aid which would ordinarily be payable under such plan to a family which consists of one adult and two children and which is without any income or resources. Section 1902(a)(10)(C)(i)(III) of the Social Security Act shall not prevent California from establishing (under the previous sentence) an applicable income limitation for families described in that sentence which is greater than the income limitation applicable to other families, if California has an applicable income limitation under section 1903(f) of such Act which is equal to the maximum applicable income limitation permitted consistent with paragraph (1)(B) of such section for families other than those described in the previous sentence.

SEC. 4122. HOME AND COMMUNITY-BASED SERVICES FOR THE ELDERLY.

(a) STATUTORY WAIVER PROGRAM.—Section 1915 (42 U.S.C. 1396n) is amended—

(1) by transferring subsection (d) to the end of such section and redesignating it as subsection (h), and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The Secretary shall by waiver provide that a State plan approved under this title shall include as 'medical assistance' under such plan payment for part or all of the cost of home or community-based services (other than room and board) approved by the Secretary which are provided pursuant to a written plan of care to individuals 65 years of age or older with respect to whom there has been a determination that but for the provision of such services the individuals would require the level of care provided in a skilled nursing facility or intermediate care facility the cost of which could be reimbursed under the State plan.

"(2) A waiver shall not be granted under this subsection unless the State provides assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that—

"(A) necessary safeguards (including adequate standards for provider participation) have been taken to protect the health and welfare of individuals provided services under the waiver and to assure financial accountability for funds expended with respect to such services;

"(B) the State will provide, with respect to individuals 65 years of age or older who—

"(i) are entitled to medical assistance for skilled nursing or intermediate care facility services under the State plan,

"(ii) may require such services, and

"(iii) may be eligible for such home or community-based services under such waiver, for an evaluation of the need for such skilled nursing facility or intermediate care facility services;

"(C) such individuals who are determined to be likely to require the level of care provided in a skilled nursing facility or intermediate care facility are informed of the feasible alternatives, if available under the waiver, at the choice of such individuals, to the provision of skilled nursing facility or intermediate care facility services;

"(D) the State will provide to the Secretary annually, consistent with a data collection plan designed by the Secretary, information on the impact of the waiver granted under this subsection on the type and amount of medical assistance provided under the State plan and on the health and welfare of recipients; and

"(E) under the waiver the amount of the medical assistance with respect to skilled nursing facility services, intermediate care facility services, and home and community-based services (as defined in paragraph (5)(C)) under the State plan for individuals 65 years of age or older during a waiver year will not exceed the projected amount described in paragraph (5)(B) for that year.

"(3) A waiver granted under this subsection may include a waiver of the requirements of section 1902(a)(1) (relating to statewideness), section 1902(a)(10)(B) (relating to comparability), and section 1902(a)(10)(C)(i)(III) (relating to income and resource rules applicable in the community). Subject to a termination by the State (with at least 60 days advance notice to the Secretary) at the beginning of any calendar quarter, a waiver under this subsection shall be for an initial term of 3 years and, upon the request of a State, shall be extended for additional 5-year periods unless the Secretary determines that for the previous waiver period the assurances provided under paragraph (2) have not been met. A waiver may provide, with respect to post-eligibility treatment of income of all individuals receiving services under the waiver, that the maximum amount of the individual's income which may be disregarded for any month is equal to the amount that may be allowed for that purpose under a waiver under subsection (c).

"(4) A waiver under this subsection may, consistent with paragraph (2), provide medical assistance to individuals (to the extent consistent with written plans of care, which are subject to the approval of the State) for case management services, homemaker/home health aide services and personal care services, adult day health services, habilitation services, respite care, and such other services requested by the State as the Secretary may approve.

"(5)(A) In the case of a waiver approved under this subsection, notwithstanding any other provision of section 1903 to the contrary, payment may not be made under section 1903(a)(1) for medical assistance with respect to skilled nursing facility services, intermediate care facility services, and home and community-based services (as defined in subparagraph (C)) under the State plan for individuals 65 years of age or older during a waiver year under this subsection (whether or not the waiver is terminated during the waiver year) to the extent that the amount of such assistance exceeds the projected amount described in subparagraph (B) for that year.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the projected amount under this subparagraph for a waiver year is the sum of the following two amounts (determined by the Secretary):

"(i) The aggregate amount of the State's medical assistance under this title for skilled nursing facility services and intermediate care facility services furnished to individuals 65 years of age or older for the base year (as defined in subparagraph (C)(ii)) increased by the nursing facility increase percentage (as defined in subparagraph (D)(i), subject to subparagraph (D)(ii)(I)).

"(ii) The aggregate amount of the State's medical assistance under this title for home and community-based services (as defined in subparagraph (D)) furnished to individuals 65 years of age or older for the base year (as defined in subparagraph (C)(ii)) increased by the home care increase percentage (as defined in subparagraph (D)(i), subject to subparagraph (D)(ii)(II)).

If the waiver applies less than Statewide, the amount projected under this subparagraph shall be reduced to reflect the portion of the State covered under the waiver.

"(C) In this paragraph:

"(i) The term 'home and community-based services' includes services described in section 1905(a)(7), services described in paragraph (4), and personal care services.

"(ii) The term 'base year' means, with respect to a State, the most recent 4-calendar-quarter period (ending before October 1, 1987) for which actual expenditures under this title have been reported to, and approved by, the Secretary as of January 31, 1988.

"(D)(i) The terms 'nursing facility increase percentage' and 'home care increase percentage' mean, with respect to a waiver year, the applicable annual percentage (as defined in clause (ii)) compounded annually over the period (including fractions of a year before the first waiver year) beginning with the last month of the base year and ending with the last month of the waiver year.

"(ii) In clause (i), the term 'applicable annual percentage' means 9 percent per year or, if greater for a period beginning on or after October 1, 1989, for purposes of—

"(I) subparagraph (B)(i), the sum of the percentage increase in the facility index (projected under clause (iii)(I)) from the month before the period to the last month of the period and the percentage increase in the elderly population of the State (projected under clause (iii)(III)) from the beginning to the end of the period; or

"(II) subparagraph (B)(ii), the sum of the percentage increase in the home and community-based services index (projected under clause (iii)(II)) from the month before the period to the last month of the period and the percentage increase in the elderly population of the State (projected under clause (iii)(III)) from the beginning to the end of the period.

"(iii) The Secretary shall develop and promulgate by regulation (by not later than July 1, 1989)—

"(I) a method, based on an index of appropriately weighted indicators of changes in the wages and prices of the mix of goods and services which comprise both skilled nursing facility services and intermediate care facility services (regardless of the source of payment for such services), for projecting, before and with respect to a period, the percentage increase in such index between the month before the period to the last month of the period;

"(II) a method, based on an index of appropriately weighted indicators of changes in the wages and prices of the mix of goods and services which comprise home and community-based services (regardless of the source of payment for such services), for projecting, before and with respect to a period, the percentage increase in such index between the month before the period to the last month of the period; and

"(III) a method for projecting, on a State specific basis, the percentage increase in the number of residents in each State who are over 75 years of age for any period.".

(b) Conforming Amendment.—Section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii)(VI) (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(10)(A)(ii)(VI)) is amended by striking "section 1915(c)" each place it appears and inserting "subsection (c) or (d) of section 1915".

(c) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1988, without regard to whether regulations to implement such amendments are promulgated by such date.

(d) Transition for Existing Waivers.—In the case of a State which, as of December 1, 1987, has a waiver approved with respect to elderly individuals under section 1915(c) of the Social Security Act, which waiver is scheduled to expire before July 1, 1988, if the State notifies the Secretary of Health and Human Services before the expiration date of such waiver of the State's intention to file an application for a waiver under section 1915(d) of such Act (as amended by subsection (a) of this section), the Secretary shall extend approval of the State's waiver, under section 1915(c) of such Act, on the same terms and conditions through July 1, 1988.

SEC. 4123. PROTECTION OF INCOME AND RESOURCES OF COUPLE FOR MAINTENANCE OF COMMUNITY SPOUSE.

(a) In General.—Title XIX, as amended by section 4111(a), is amended by inserting after section 1922 the following new section:

"TREATMENT OF INCOME AND RESOURCES FOR CERTAIN INSTITUTIONALIZED SPOUSES

"Sec. 1923. (a) Special Treatment for Institutionalized Spouses.—

"(1) Supersedes other provisions.—In determining the eligibility for medical assistance of an institutionalized spouse (as defined in subsection (h)(1)), the provisions of this section supersede any other provision of this title (including sections 1902(a)(17) and 1902(f)) which is inconsistent with them.

"(2) No comparable treatment required.—Any different treatment provided under this section for institutionalized spouses shall not, by reason of paragraph (10) or (17) of section 1902(a), require such treatment for other individuals.

"(3) Does not affect certain determinations.—Except as this section specifically provides, this section does not apply to—

"(A) the determination of what constitutes income or resources, or

"(B) the methodology and standards for determining and evaluating income and resources.

"(4) Application in certain states and territories.—

"(A) Application in states operating under demonstration projects.—In the case of any State which is providing medical assistance to its residents under a waiver granted under section 1115, the Secretary shall require the State to meet the requirements of this section in same manner as the State would be required to meet such requirement if the State had in effect a plan approved under this title.

"(B) No application in commonwealths and territories.—This section shall only apply to a State that is one of the 50 States or the District of Columbia.

"(b) Rules for Treatment of Income.—

"(1) Separate treatment of income.—During any month in which an institutionalized spouse is in the institution, no income of the community spouse shall be deemed available to the institutionalized spouse.

"(2) Attribution of income.—In determining the income of an institutionalized spouse or community spouse, after the institutionalized spouse has been determined to be eligible for medical assistance, except as otherwise provided in this section and regardless of any State laws relating to community property or the division of marital property, the following rules apply:

"(A) Non-trust property.—Subject to subparagraphs (C) and (D), in the case of income not from a trust, unless the instrument providing the income otherwise specifically provides—

"(i) if payment of income is made solely in the name of the institutionalized spouse or the community spouse, the income shall be considered available only to that respective spouse;

"(ii) if payment of income is made in the names of the institutionalized spouse and the community spouse, one-half of the income shall be considered available to each of them; and

"(iii) if payment of income is made in the names of the institutionalized spouse or the community spouse, or both, and to another person or persons, the income shall be considered available to each spouse in proportion to the spouse's interest (or, if payment is made with respect to both spouses and no such interest is specified, one-half of the joint interest shall be considered available to each spouse).

"(B) Trust property.—In the case of a trust—

"(i) except as provided in clause (ii), income shall be attributed in accordance with the provisions of this title (including sections 1902(a)(17) and 1902(k)), and

"(ii) income shall be considered available to each spouse as provided in the trust, or, in the absence of a specific provision in the trust—

"(I) if payment of income is made solely to the institutionalized spouse or the community spouse, the income shall be considered available only to that respective spouse;

"(II) if payment of income is made to both the institutionalized spouse and the community spouse, one-half of the income shall be considered available to each of them; and

"(III) if payment of income is made to the institutionalized spouse or the community spouse, or both, and to another person or persons, the income shall be considered available to each spouse in proportion to the spouse's interest (or, if payment is made with respect to both spouses and no such interest is specified, one-half of the joint interest shall be considered available to each spouse).

"(C) Property with no instrument.—In the case of income not from a trust in which there is no instrument establishing ownership, subject to subparagraph (D), one-half of the income shall be considered to be available to the institutionalized spouse and one-half to the community spouse.

"(D) Rebutting ownership.—The rules of subparagraphs (A) and (C) are superseded to the extent that an institutionalized spouse can establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the ownership interests in income are other than as provided under such subparagraphs.

"(c) Rules for Treatment of Resources.—

"(1) Computation of spousal share at time of institutionalization.—

"(A) Total joint resources.—There shall be computed (as of the beginning of a continuous period of institutionalization of the institutionalized spouse)—

"(i) the total value of the resources to the extent either the institutionalized spouse or the community spouse has an ownership interest, and

"(ii) a spousal share which is equal to ½ of such total value.

"(B) Assessment.—At the request of an institutionalized spouse or community spouse, at the beginning of a continuous period of institutionalization of the institutionalized spouse and upon the receipt of relevant documentation of resources, the State shall promptly assess and document the total value described in subparagraph (A)(i) and shall provide a copy of such assessment and documentation to each spouse and shall retain a copy of the assessment for use under this section. If the request is not part of an application for medical assistance under this title, the State may, at its option as a condition of providing the assessment, require payment of a fee not exceeding the reasonable expenses of providing and documenting the assessment.

"(2) Attribution of resources at time of initial eligibility determination.—In determining the resources of an institutionalized spouse at the time of application for benefits under this title, regardless of any State laws relating to community property or the division of marital property—

"(A) except as provided in subparagraph (B), all the resources held by either the institutionalized spouse, community spouse, or both, shall be considered to be available to the institutionalized spouse, and

"(B) resources held in the name of (or for the sole benefit of) the community spouse shall not be considered to be available to an institutionalized spouse, to the extent that the amount of such resources does not exceed the amount computed under subsection (f)(2)(A) (as of the time of application for benefits) or, if greater, the amount that a court has ordered to be retained by the community spouse for the support of the community spouse.

"(3) Separate treatment of resources after eligibility for benefits established.—During the continuous period in which an institutionalized spouse is in an institution and after the month in which an institutionalized spouse is determined to be eligible for benefits under this title, no resources of the community spouse shall be deemed available to the institutionalized spouse.

"(4) Resources defined.—In this section, the term 'resources' does not include—

"(A) resources excluded under subsection (a) or (d) of section 1613, and

"(B) resources that would be excluded under section 1613(a)(2)(A) but for the limitation on total value described in such section.

"(d) Protecting Income for Community Spouse.—

"(1) Allowances to be offset from income of institutionalized spouse.—After an institutionalized spouse is determined to be eligible for medical assistance, in determining the amount of the spouse's income that is to be applied monthly to payment for the costs of care in the institution, there shall be deducted from the spouse's monthly income the following amounts in the following order:

"(A) A personal needs allowance (described in section 1902(q)(1)), in an amount not less than the amount specified in section 1902(q)(2).

"(B) A community spouse monthly income allowance (as defined in paragraph (2)), but only to the extent income of the institutionalized spouse is made available to (or for the benefit of) the community spouse.

"(C) A family allowance, for each family member, equal to at least ⅓ of the amount by which the amount described in paragraph (3)(A)(i) exceeds the amount of the monthly income of that family member.

"(D) Amounts for incurred expenses for medical or remedial care for the institutionalized spouse that are not subject to payment by a legally liable third party.

In subparagraph (C), the term 'family member' only includes minor or dependent children, dependent parents, or dependent siblings of the institutionalized or community spouse who are residing with the community spouse.

"(2) Community spouse monthly income allowance defined.—In this section (except as provided in paragraph (5)), the 'community spouse monthly income allowance' for a community spouse is an amount by which—

"(A) except as provided in subsection (e), the minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance (established under and in accordance with paragraph (3)) for the spouse, exceeds

"(B) the amount of monthly income otherwise available to the community spouse (determined without regard to such an allowance).

"(3) Establishment of minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance.—

"(A) In general.—Each State shall establish a minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance for each community spouse which, subject to subparagraph (B), is equal to or exceeds—

"(i) 150 percent of 1/12 of the nonfarm income official poverty line (defined by the Office of Management and Budget and revised annually in accordance with sections 652 and 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) for a family unit of 2 members; plus

"(ii) an excess shelter allowance (as defined in paragraph (4)); plus

"(iii) ½ of the amount by which the income available to the institutionalized spouse exceeds the sum of the amounts described in clauses (i) and (ii).

A revision of the official poverty line referred to in clause (i) shall apply to medical assistance furnished during and after the second calendar quarter that begins after the date of publication of the revision.

"(B) Cap on minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance.—The minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance established under subparagraph (A) may not exceed $1,500 (subject to adjustment under subsections (e) and (g)), or, if greater, the amount specified under the State plan.

"(4) Excess shelter allowance defined.—In paragraph (3)(A)(ii), the term 'excess shelter allowance' means, for a community spouse, the amount by which the sum of—

"(A) the spouse's expenses for rent or mortgage payment (including principal and interest), taxes and insurance and, in the case of a condominium or cooperative, required maintenance charge, for the community spouse's principal residence, and

"(B) the standard utility allowance (used by the State under section 5(e) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977) or, if the State does not use such an allowance, the spouse's actual utility expenses, exceeds 30 percent of the amount described in paragraph (3)(A)(i), except that, in the case of a condominium or cooperative, for which a maintenance charge is included under subparagraph (A), any allowance under subparagraph (B) shall be reduced to the extent the maintenance charge includes utility expenses.

"(5) Court ordered support.—If a court has entered an order against an institutionalized spouse for monthly income for the support of the community spouse, the community spouse monthly income allowance for the spouse shall be not less than the amount of the monthly income so ordered.

"(e) Notice and Fair Hearing.—

"(1) Notice.—Upon—

"(A) a determination of eligibility for medical assistance of an institutionalized spouse, or

"(B) a request by either the institutionalized spouse, or the community spouse, or a representative acting on behalf of either spouse, each State shall notify both spouses (in the case described in subparagraph (A)) or the spouse making the request (in the case described in subparagraph (B)) of the amount of the community spouse monthly income allowance (described in subsection (d)(1)(B)), of the amount of any family allowances (described in subsection (d)(1)(C)), of the method for computing the amount of the community spouse resources allowance permitted under subsection (f), and of the spouse's right to a fair hearing under this subsection respecting ownership or availability of income or resources, and the determination of the community spouse monthly income or resource allowance.

"(2) Fair hearing.—If either the institutionalized spouse or the community spouse is dissatisfied with a determination of—

"(A) the community spouse monthly income allowance because the amount of the minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance (established under subsection (d)(3)) is not adequate to support the community spouse without financial duress;

"(B) the amount of monthly income otherwise available to the community spouse (as applied under subsection (d)(2)(B));

"(C) the computation of the spousal share of resources under subsection (d)(1)(B);

"(D) the attribution of resources under subsection (d)(2); or

"(E) the determination of the community spouse resource allowance (as defined in subsection (f)(2)), such spouse is entitled to a fair hearing described in section 1902(a)(3) with respect to such determination. If either such spouse establishes that the minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance or the community spouse resource allowance (in relation to the amount of income generated by such an allowance) is not adequate to support the community spouse without financial duress, there shall be substituted, for the minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance in subsection (d)(2)(A) (or for the community spouse resource allowance under subsection (f)(2)), an amount adequate to support the community spouse without financial duress.

"(f) Permitting Transfer of Resources to Community Spouse.—

"(1) In general.—An institutionalized spouse may, without regard to section 1917, transfer to the community spouse (or to another for the sole benefit of the community spouse) an amount equal to the community spouse resource allowance (as defined in paragraph (2)), but only to the extent the resources of the institutionalized spouse are transferred to (or for the sole benefit of) the community spouse.

"(2) Community spouse resource allowance defined.—In paragraph (1), the 'community spouse resource allowance' for a community spouse is an amount (if any) by which—

"(A) the greatest of—

"(i) $12,000 (subject to adjustment under subsection (f)), or, if greater, the amount specified under the State plan (but not more than 4 times the amount described in clause (i));

"(ii) the lesser of (I) the spousal share computed under subsection (c)(1), or (II) 4 times the amount described in clause (i);

"(iii) the amount established under subsection (e)(2); or

"(iv) the amount transferred under a court order under paragraph (3), exceeds

"(B) the amount of the resources otherwise available to the community spouse (determined without regard to such an allowance).

"(g) Indexing Dollar Amounts.—For services furnished during a calendar year after 1988, the dollar amounts specified in subsections (d)(3)(B) and (f)(2)(A)(i) shall be increased by the same percentage as the percentage increase in the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average) between September 1987 and the September before the calendar year involved.

The period of ineligibility shall begin with the month in which such resources were transferred and the number of months in such period shall be equal to (A) the total uncompensated value of the resources so transferred, divided by (B) the average cost, to a private patient at the time of the application, of nursing home care in the State or, at State option, in the community in which the individual is institutionalized.

"(2) An individual shall not be ineligible for medical assistance by reason of paragraph (1) to the extent that—

(e) Effective Date.—(1) The amendments made by this section apply (except as provided under paragraphs (2) and (3)) to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1988, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendments have been promulgated by such date.

PART 3—ADDRESSING THE NEEDS OF WORKING WELFARE RECIPIENTS

SEC. 4131. MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY.

(a) In General.—Title XIX, as amended by sections 4111(a) and 4123(a), is amended by inserting after section 1923 the following new section:

“EXTENSION OF MEDICAID BENEFITS

“Sec. 1924. (a) Initial 6-Month Extension.—

“(1) Requirement.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, each State plan approved under this title must provide that each family which was receiving aid pursuant to a plan of the State approved under part A of title IV in at least 3 of the 6 months immediately preceding the month in which such family becomes ineligible for such aid, because of hours of, or income from employment of the caretaker relative (as defined in subsection (e)), shall, subject to paragraph (3) and without any reapplication for benefits under the plan, remain eligible for assistance under the plan approved under this title during the immediately succeeding 6-month period in accordance with this subsection.

“(2) Notice of benefits.—Each State, in the notice of termination of aid under part A of title IV sent to a family meeting the requirements of paragraph (1)—

“(A) shall notify the family of its right to extended medical assistance under this subsection and include in the notice a description of the circumstances (described in paragraph (3)) under which such extension may be terminated; and

“(B) shall include a card or other evidence of the family's entitlement to assistance under this title for the period provided in this subsection.

“(3) Termination of extension.—

“(A) No dependent child.—Subject to subparagraph (B), extension of assistance during the 6-month period described in paragraph (1) to a family shall terminate (during such period) at the close of the first month in which the family ceases to include a child who is (or would if need be) a dependent child under part A of title IV; except that, with respect to a child who would cease to receive medical assistance because of this subparagraph but who may be eligible for assistance under the State plan because the child is described in clause (i) or (v) of section 1905(a), the State may not discontinue such assistance under this subparagraph until the State has determined that the child is not eligible for assistance under the plan.

“(B) Notice before termination.—No termination of assistance shall become effective under subparagraph (A) until the State has provided the family with notice of the grounds for the termination.

“(4) Scope of coverage.—

“(A) In general.—Subject to subparagraph (B), during the 6-month extension period under this subsection, the amount, duration, and scope of medical assistance made available with respect to a family shall be the same as if the family were still receiving aid under the plan approved under part A of title IV.

“(B) State medicaid ‘wrap-around’ option.—A State, at its option, may pay a family's expenses for premiums, deductibles, coinsurance, or similar costs for health insurance or other health coverage offered by a employer of the caretaker relative or the absent parent of a dependent child. In the case of such coverage offered by an employer of the caretaker relative—

“(i) the State may require the caretaker relative, as a condition of extension of coverage under this subsection, to make application for such employer coverage, but only if—

“(I) the caretaker relative is not required to make financial contributions for such coverage (whether through payroll deduction, payment of deductibles, coinsurance, or similar costs, or otherwise), and

“(II) the State provides, directly or otherwise, for payment of any of the premium amount, deductible, coinsurance, or similar expense that the employee is otherwise required to pay; and “(ii) the State shall treat the coverage under such an employer plan as a third party liability (under section 1902(a)(25)).

Payments for coverage under this subparagraph shall be considered, for purposes of section 1903(a), to be payments for medical assistance.

“(b) Mandatory 18-Month Extension.—

“(1) Requirement.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, each State plan approved under this title shall provide that the State shall offer to each family, which has received assistance during the entire 6-month period under subsection (a) and which meets the requirement of paragraph (2)(B), in the last month of the period the option of extending coverage under this subsection for the succeeding 18-month period, subject to paragraph (3).

“(2) Notice of option.—

“(A) In general.—Each State, during the 3rd and 6th month of any extended assistance furnished to a family under subsection (a), shall notify the family of the family's option for subsequent extended assistance under this subsection. Each such notice shall include (i) a statement as to whether any premiums are required for such extended assistance, and (ii) a description of other out-of-pocket expenses, benefits, reporting and payment procedures, and any pre-existing condition limitations, waiting periods, or other coverage limitations imposed under any alternative coverage options offered under paragraph (4)(D).

“(B) Reporting of earnings required to determine any premium.—If the State requires a premium for extended assistance under this subsection, the State may require (as a condition for extended assistance under this subsection) that a family receiving extended assistance under subsection (a) report to the State, not later than the 21st day of the 4th month in the period of extended assistance under subsection (a), on the family's gross monthly earnings (less the cost of day care for dependent children) in each of the first 3 months of that period; but such requirement shall only apply if the notice under subparagraph (A) during the 3rd month of assistance describes the requirement of this subparagraph.

“(C) 6th month notice.—The notice under subparagraph (A), furnished during the 6th month of assistance under this subsection, shall describe the amount of any premium required of a particular family for each of the first 3 months of extended assistance under this subsection.

“(A) In general.—Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), extension of assistance during the 18-month period described in paragraph (1) to a family shall terminate (during the period) as follows:

"(i) No dependent child.—The extension shall terminate at the close of the first month in which the family ceases to include a child who is (or would if need be) a dependent child under part A of title IV.

"(ii) Failure to pay any premium.—If the family fails to pay any premium for a month under paragraph (5) by the 21st day of the following month, the extension shall terminate at the close of that following month, unless the individual has established, to the satisfaction of the State, good cause for the failure to pay such premium on a timely basis.

"(iii) Quarterly income reporting and test.—The extension shall terminate at the close of the 1st, 4th, 7th, 10th, 13th, or 16th month of the 18-month period if—

"(I) the family fails to report to the State, by the 21st day of such month, information on the family's gross monthly earnings (less the costs of day care for dependent children) in each of the previous 3 months, unless the family has established, to the satisfaction of the State, good cause for the failure to report on a timely basis; except that this subclause shall not apply unless the State has notified the family, in the month before the month in which information is required to be reported under this subclause, of the reporting requirement of this subclause;

"(II) the caretaker relative had no earnings in one or more of the previous 3 months, unless such lack of any earnings was due to an involuntary loss of employment, illness, or other good cause, established to the satisfaction of the State; or

"(III) the State determines that the family's average gross monthly earnings (less costs of day care for dependent children) during the immediately preceding 3-month period exceeds 185 percent of the official poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved.

Instead of terminating a family's extension under clause (I), a State, at its option, may provide for suspension of the extension until the month after the month in which the family reports information required under that subclause, but only if the family's extension has not otherwise been terminated under subclause (II) or (III).

Information described in clause (iii)(I) shall be subject to the restrictions on use and disclosure of information provided under section 402(a)(9). The State shall make determinations under clause (iii)(III) for a family each time a report described in clause (iii)(I) for the family is received.

"(B) Notice before termination.—No termination of assistance shall become effective under subparagraph (A) until the State has provided the family with notice of the grounds for the termination, which notice shall include (in the case of termination under subparagraph (A)(iii)(II), relating to no continued earnings) a description of how the family may reestablish eligibility for medical assistance under the State plan.

"(C) Continuation in certain cases until redetermination.—

"(i) Dependent children.—With respect to a child who would cease to receive medical assistance because of subparagraph (A)(i) but who may be eligible for assistance under the State plan because the child is described in clause (i) or (v) of section 1905(a), the State may not discontinue such assistance under such subparagraph until the State has determined that the child is not eligible for assistance under the plan.

"(ii) Medically needy.—With respect to an individual who would cease to receive medical assistance because of clause (ii) or (iii) of subparagraph (A) but who may be eligible for assistance under the State plan because the individual is within a category of person for which medical assistance under the State plan is available under section 1902(a)(10)(C) (relating to medically needy individuals), the State may not discontinue such assistance under such subparagraph until the State has determined that the individual is not eligible for assistance under the plan.

"(4) Coverage.—

"(A) In general.—During the extension period under this subsection—

"(i) the State plan shall offer to each family medical assistance which (subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C)) is the same amount, duration, and scope as would be made available to the family if it were still receiving aid under the plan approved under part A of title IV; and

"(ii) the State plan may offer alternative coverage described in subparagraph (D).

"(B) Elimination of most non-acute care benefits.—At a State's option and notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a State may choose not to provide medical assistance under this subsection with respect to any (or all) of the items and services described in paragraphs (4)(A), (6), (7), (8), (11), (13), (14), (15), (16), (18), (20), and (21) of section 1905(a).

"(C) State medicaid 'wrap-around' option.—At a State's option, the State may elect to apply the option described in subsection (a)(4)(B) (relating to 'wrap-around' coverage) for families electing medical assistance under this subsection in the same manner as such option applies to families provided extended medical assistance under subsection (a).

"(D) Alternative assistance.—At a State's option, instead of the medical assistance otherwise made available under this subsection the State may offer families a choice of health care coverage under one or more of the following:

"(i) Enrollment in family option of employer plan.—Enrollment of the caretaker relative and dependent children in a family option of the group health plan offered to the caretaker relative.

"(ii) Enrollment in family option of state employee plan.—Enrollment of the caretaker relative and dependent children in a family option within the options of the group health plan or plans offered by the State to State employees.

"(iii) Enrollment in state uninsured plan.—Enrollment of the caretaker relative and dependent children in a basic State health plan offered by the State to individuals in the State (or areas of the State) otherwise unable to obtain health insurance coverage.

"(iv) Enrollment in hmo.—Enrollment of the caretaker relative and dependent children in a health maintenance organization (as defined in section 1903(m)(1)(A)) less than 50 percent of the membership (enrolled on a prepaid basis) of which consists of individuals who are eligible to receive benefits under this title (other than because of the option offered under this clause). The option of enrollment under this clause is in addition to, and not in lieu of, any enrollment option that the State might offer under subparagraph (A)(i) with respect to receiving services through a health maintenance organization in accordance with section 1903(m).

If a State elects to offer an option to enroll a family under this subparagraph, the State shall pay any premiums and other costs for such enrollment imposed on the family. A State's payment of premiums for the enrollment of families under this subparagraph (not including any premiums otherwise payable by an employer and less the amount of premiums collected from such families under paragraph (5)) shall be considered, for purposes of section 1903(a)(1), to be payments for medical assistance.

"(E) Open enrollment.—If a State offers an alternative option under subparagraph (D) to families, the State must offer such families the option of enrolling or disenrolling in such an option during a one month period each year without cause and, in the case of enrollment under clause (iii) or (iv) of such subparagraph, the option of disenrolling from the organization or plan for cause at any time.

"(F) Prohibition on cost-sharing for maternity and preventive pediatric care.—

"(i) In general.—If a State offers an alternative option under subparagraph (D) for families, under the option the State must assure that care described in clause (ii) is available without charge to the families through—

"(I) payment of any deductibles, coinsurance, or other cost-sharing respecting such care, or

"(II) providing coverage under the State plan for such care without any cost-sharing, or any combination of such mechanisms.

"(ii) Care described.—The care described in this clause consists of—

"(I) services related to pregnancy (including prenatal, delivery, and post partum services), and

"(II) ambulatory preventive pediatric care (including ambulatory early and periodic screening, diagnosis, and treatment services under section 1905(a)(4)(B)) for each child who meets the age and date of birth requirements to be a qualified child under section 1905(n)(2).

"(5) Premium.—

"(A) Permitted.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this title (including section 1916), a State may impose a premium for a family for extended coverage under this subsection, which premium may vary by family size.

"(B) Level may vary by option offered.—The level of such premium may vary, for the same family, for each option offered by a State under paragraph (4)(C).

"(C) Limit on premium.—In no case may the amount of any premium under this paragraph for a family for a month in one of the premium payment periods described in subparagraph (D)(ii) exceed 10 percent of the amount by which—

"(i) the family's average gross monthly earnings (less the costs of day care for dependent children) during the premium base period (as defined in subparagraph (D)(iii)), exceeds

"(ii) the monthly minimum wage earnings (as defined in subparagraph (D)(i)) for the period.

"(D) Definitions.—In subparagraph (C):

"(i) The term 'monthly minimum wage earnings' means the average amount of earnings which one person would earn during a month in the period if the person were employed for 8 hours on each weekday in the month and was paid the minimum wage rate provided under section 6(a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

"(ii) A 'premium payment period' described in this clause is a 3-month period beginning with the 1st, 4th, 7th, 10th, 13th, or 16th month of the 18-month extension period provided under this subsection.

"(iii) The term 'premium base period' means, with respect to a particular premium payment period, the period of 3 consecutive months the last of which is 4 months before the beginning of that premium payment period.

"(c) Applicability in States and Territories.—

"(1) States operating under demonstration projects.—In the case of any State which is providing medical assistance to its residents under a waiver granted under section 1115(a), the Secretary shall require the State to meet the requirements of this section in the same manner as the State would be required to meet such requirement if the State had in effect a plan approved under this title.

"(2) Inapplicability in commonwealths and territories.—The provisions of this section shall only apply to the 50 States and the District of Columbia.

"(d) General Disqualification for Fraud.—This section shall not apply to an individual who is a member of a family if the individual's eligibility for aid was terminated because of fraud or the imposition of a sanction.

"(e) Caretaker Relative Defined.—In this section, the term 'caretaker relative' has the meaning of such term as used in part A of title IV.".

(b) Conforming Amendments.—(1) Section 1902(e)(1) (42 U.S.C. 1396a(e)(1)) is amended by striking "Notwithstanding" and all that follows through the end and inserting the following: "For provision relating to extension of coverage for certain families which have received aid pursuant to a State plan approved under part A of title IV and which have earned income, see section 1924.".

SEC. 5003. COAL TRADE EQUALIZATION.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Coal Trade Equalization Act of 1987".

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the United States possesses vast reserves of coal which can be utilized in an economical and environmentally sound manner for the purpose of generating electricity and for industrial and other commercial applications;

(2) reliance on often volatile foreign sources of coal does not contribute to the energy independence and security of the United States, aggravates the balance of trade deficit, may jeopardize the reliability of electrical power generation in certain regions of the Nation, does not make full use of domestic resources and may contribute to unemployment in regions dependent to some degree upon the production and utilization of coal for their economic welfare;

(3) there exists no national policy on imports of coal, which imports currently enter the United States free of tariff;

(4) many foreign nations impose a variety of trade constraints on imported coal, including coal which originates in the United States; and

(5) foreign coal producers are not required to comply with stringent environmental, health, welfare, and safety standards thereby giving foreign coal producers a competitive advantage over domestic coal producers.

(c) By the Secretary of the Interior Regarding the Federal Coal Leasing Program and the United States Coal Industry.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior shall investigate the relationship between coal imports and—

(A) the management of the Federal coal leasing program; and

(B) the economic condition of the United States coal industry;

and report the results thereof within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate.

(2) If the Secretary of the Interior finds, as a result of the investigation under subsection (a), that coal imports are adversely affecting the management of the Federal coal leasing program and the economic condition of one or more sectors of the United States coal industry, the Secretary shall include in the report required under subsection (a) appropriate legislative recommendations.

(a) Short Title; References.—

(1) Short Title.—This section may be cited as the "Federal Onshore Oil and Gas Leasing Reform Act of 1987".

(2) References.—Any reference in this section to the "Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920" is a reference to the Act of February 25, 1920 entitled "An Act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas and sodium on the public domain" (30 U.S.C. 181 and following).

(b) Oil and Gas Leasing System.—

(1) Competitive Bidding.—Paragraph (1) of section 17(b) of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226(b)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) All lands to be leased under this section (except lands within a special tar sand area) shall be leased as provided in this paragraph to the highest responsible qualified bidder by competitive bidding under general regulations. Leases may not be issued in units larger than 2,560 acres except in Alaska where such units shall not be larger than 5,760 acres. Such units shall be as nearly compact as possible. Lease sales shall be conducted by oral bidding except that sealed bids may be submitted. Lease sales shall be held for each State, where appropriate, not less frequently than quarterly. Lease sales may be held more frequently if the Secretary of the Interior determines such sales are necessary. The public may make confidential expressions of interest about specific lands. A non-refundable fee of at least $75 shall be required to be paid by any person to bid on any lease offered under the provisions of this subsection. A lease under this paragraph shall be conditioned upon the payment of a royalty at a rate of not less than 12½ percent in amount or value of the production removed or sold from the lease. The Secretary of the Interior shall accept the highest bid at or above $2 per acre from a responsible qualified bidder without evaluation of the lands proposed for lease; except that the Secretary need not issue a lease if, in his discretion, he determines that accepting the highest bid offered for such lease would not represent a reasonable return to the public. Lands for which no bids, or no bids at or above $2 per acre, are received shall become available for leasing under subsection (c) for a period not to exceed one year after the lease sale.".

(2) Noncompetitive Leasing.—Section 17(c) of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226(c)), is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) If lands initially required to be leased under subsection (b)(1) become available for leasing under this subsection, the person first making application for the lease after the lands become available under this subsection who is qualified to hold a lease under this Act shall be entitled to a lease of such lands without competitive bidding, upon payment of a non-refundable application fee of at least $75. A lease under this subsection shall be conditioned upon the payment of a royalty at a rate of not less than 12½ per centum in amount or value of the production removed or sold from the lease.

"(2) If lands become available for noncompetitive leasing under this subsection, and if at the expiration of the 1-year period referred to in subsection (b)(1), no lease application is pending for the lands under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the lands shall again be available for leasing in accordance with subsection (b)(1). When any lease issued under paragraph (1) or under subsection (b)(1) terminates, expires, is cancelled, or is relinquished, the land covered by such lease shall again be available for leasing in accordance with subsection (b)(1).".

(3) Rentals.—Section 17(d) of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226(d)) is amended to read as follows:

Each year's lease rental shall be paid in advance. A minimum royalty of not less than $3 per acre in lieu of rental shall be payable at the expiration of each lease year beginning on or after a discovery of oil or gas in paying quantities on the land leased.".

(4) Notice and Reclamation.—

(A) Additional provisions.—Section 17 of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226) is amended by relettering subsections (f) through (k) as subsections (i) through (n) and by adding the following new subsections (f) through (h):

"(f) Maps and Descriptions.—At least 60 days before offering lands for lease under this section, and at least 30 days before substantially modifying the terms of any lease issued under this section, the Secretary shall provide public notice through publication in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall also make available periodic notice of pending applications for permits to drill to the appropriate State and local governments and the public. All notices shall include the terms or modified lease terms and maps or a narrative description of the affected lands. Where the inclusion of maps in such notice is not practicable, maps of the affected lands shall be made available to the public for review. Such maps shall show the location of all tracts to be leased, and of all leases already issued in the general area. The requirements of this section are in addition to any public notice required by other law.

"(g) Surface-Disturbing Activities.—The Secretary of the Interior, or for national forest lands, the Secretary of Agriculture, shall regulate all surface-disturbing activities conducted pursuant to any lease issued under this Act, and shall determine reclamation and other actions as required in the interest of conservation of surface resources. No permit to drill on an oil and gas lease issued under this Act may be granted without the analysis and approval by the Secretary concerned of a plan of operations covering proposed surface-disturbing activities within the lease area. The Secretary concerned shall, by rule or regulation, establish such standards as may be necessary to ensure that an adequate bond, surety, or other financial arrangement will be established prior to the commencement of surface-disturbing activities on any lease, to ensure the complete and timely reclamation of the lease tract, and the restoration of any lands or surface waters adversely affected by lease operations after the abandonment or cessation of oil and gas operations on the lease. No oil or gas lease may be issued under this Act to any person during any period in which, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior or Secretary of Agriculture, such person has failed or refused to comply in any material respect with the reclamation requirements and other standards established under this section for any prior lease to which such requirements and standards applied. Prior to making such determination with respect to any person the concerned Secretary shall provide such person with adequate notification and an opportunity to comply with such reclamation requirements and other standards and shall consider whether any administrative or judicial appeal is pending. Once the person has complied with the reclamation requirement or other standard concerned an oil or gas lease may be issued to such person under this Act.

"(h) Public Domain Forest Lands.—The Secretary of the Interior may not issue any lease on public domain national forest lands without the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture.".

(B) Conforming amendment.—Section 31(h) of such Act is amended by striking out "section 17(j)" and substituting "section 17(m)".

(c) Assignments.—Sections 30(a) and 30(b) of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 187a) are redesignated as sections 30A and 30B, respectively, and the third sentence of section 30A is amended by striking out the colon and all that follows and substituting a period and the following: "The Secretary may, in his discretion, disapprove an assignment of any of the following, unless the assignment constitutes the entire lease or is demonstrated to further the development of oil and gas:

"(1) A separate zone of deposit under any lease.

"(2) A part of a legal subdivision.

"(3) Less than 640 acres outside Alaska or less than 2,560 acres within Alaska.

Requests for approval of assignment or sublease shall be processed promptly by the Secretary.".

(d) Lease Cancellation.—The first sentence of section 31(b) of the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 188(b)), is amended to read as follows: "Any lease issued after August 21, 1935, under the provisions of section 17 of this Act shall be subject to cancellation by the Secretary of the Interior after 30 days notice upon the failure of the lessee to comply with any of the provisions of the lease, unless—

"(1) the leasehold contains a well capable of production of oil or gas in paying quantities, or

"(2) the lease is committed to an approved cooperative or unit plan or communitization agreement under section 17(m) of this Act which contains a well capable of production of unitized substances in paying quantities.".

(e) Land Use Plans.—The Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.), is amended by adding the following new section after section 40:

"SEC. 41. LAND USE PLANS.

"(a) Oil and Gas Leases.—

"(1) In general.—Oil and gas leases issued pursuant to this Act on public lands or public domain national forest lands on which the public has expressed substantial interest in oil and gas leasing or for which the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, finds there is a high potential for recovery of oil and gas, may be issued only if leasing of the affected lands for oil and gas has been evaluated and is provided for in a land use plan meeting the requirements of this section, as well as other applicable laws.

"(2) Amendments.—Where a land use plan has been completed, or where substantial progress has been made toward the completion of such a plan and the Secretary of the Interior (or for national public domain forest lands, the Secretary of Agriculture) determines that completion and subsequent amendment of the plan would better comply with the requirements of this section than restarting the planning process, the Secretary concerned shall take appropriate steps to amend the plan to comply with the provisions of this section. An amendment to a land use plan made pursuant to this section shall not cause initiation of a new land planning cycle.

"(3) Interim period and plan completion date.—Within 60 days after the enactment of this section, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture each shall publish a notice in the Federal Register indicating lands affected by this subsection and specifying the dates for completion or amendment of each land use plan affected by this section. In no case shall the date specified be later than January 1, 1991. Nothing in this section shall preclude the issuance of oil and gas leases during the period prior to the date specified. After the specified date, no oil and gas lease may be issued until the completion of the plan or until a plan amendment in compliance with this section is effective, except that delays in the implementation of a plan or plan amendment due to an appeal shall not preclude the issuance of oil and leases after January 1, 1991.

"(4) Considerations.—Consideration of oil and gas leasing in a land use plan, or amendments to such plan, shall include, but is not limited to, each of the following for the area subject to such plan:

"(A) The potential oil and gas resources including a map and narrative description indicating those areas with known oil and gas reserves as well as lands already under lease for oil and gas.

"(B) An analysis of the most likely social, economic, and environmental consequences of exploration and development for oil and gas recovery, including the most likely potential consequences of exploration and development of tracts already leased or for which lease applications are pending.

"(C) An identification of those specific protective stipulations to be applied to oil and gas leases, and the specific areas to which each such stipulation shall apply. The Secretary of the Interior concerned is authorized to use stipulations which reserve the right to prohibit surface occupancy of the lease area only where the Secretary determines that recovery of oil or gas from such area is feasible without surface occupancy.

"(b) Multiple Use.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to be in violation of the principles of multiple use management as set forth in Federal Land Management Policy Act of 1976 or the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, whichever is applicable.

"(c) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'land use plans' means those plans required under provisions of the Federal Land Management Policy Act of 1976 or the land management plans for national forest system units required under section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974.

"(2) The term 'public lands' means those lands identified by section 103(e) of the Federal Land Management Policy Act of 1976.".

(f) Lands Not Subject to Oil and Gas Leasing.—The Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.) is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"SEC. 42. LANDS NOT SUBJECT TO OIL AND GAS LEASING.

"(a) Prohibition.—The Secretary shall not issue any oil and gas lease under this Act on any of the following Federal lands:

"(1) Lands recommended for wilderness allocation by the surface-managing agency.

"(2) Lands within Bureau of Land Management wilderness study areas.

"(3) Lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas, except where oil and gas leasing is specifically allowed to continue by the statute designating the study area.

"(4) Lands within areas allocated for wilderness or further planning in Executive Communication 1504, Ninety-sixth Congress (House Document numbered 96-119), unless such lands are allocated to uses other than wilderness by a land and resource management plan complying with the provisions of section 41 of this Act, or have been released to uses other than wilderness by an Act of Congress.

"(b) Oil and Gas Exploration.—In the case of any area of National Forest or public lands subject to this section, nothing in this section shall affect any authority of the Secretary of the Interior (or for public domain National Forest Lands, the Secretary of Agriculture) to issue permits for exploration for oil and gas by means not requiring construction of roads or improvement of existing roads if such activity is conducted in a manner compatible with the preservation of the wilderness environment.".

(g) Effective Date Regulations.—

(1) In General.—Except as provided in paragraph (3), after enactment of this section all oil and gas leasing pursuant to the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.) shall be conducted in accordance with the amendments made by this section.

(2) Regulations; Early Lease Sales.—

(A) Regulations.—The Secretary shall issue final regulations to implement amendments made by this section within 180 days after the enactment of this Act. The regulations shall be effective when published in the Federal Register.

(C) Lease sales before regulations.—The Secretary may hold one or more lease sales conducted in accordance with the amendments made by this section before promulgation of regulations referred to in this subsection. Sale procedures for such sale shall be established in the notice of sale.

(3) Pending Applications.—

(B) Over-the-counter.—All noncompetitive oil and gas lease offers filed pursuant to the regulations governing the over-the-counter leasing system (under 43 CFR subpart 3111 as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act) prior to September 15, 1987, shall be processed, and leases shall be issued, if appropriate, under the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.) as it was in effect before its amendment by this section.

(3) Section 4 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601–6a) is amended by adding the following new subsections at the end thereof:

The preceding sentence shall not apply to fees collected by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, amounts covered into such special account for each such agency during each fiscal year shall be available for obligation or expenditure by the agency after the end of such fiscal year, to be used for resource protection, research, interpretation and maintenance activities related to resource protection at facilities managed by that agency at which outdoor recreation is available. The preceding sentence shall not apply in the case of fees collected by the National Park Service (or by any public or private entity under contract with the National Park Service). Amounts covered into the special account for the National Park Service during each fiscal year shall be allocated among park system units in accordance with subsection (j) in the first fiscal year after the year in which such funds are covered into the special account. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, such amounts shall be available for obligation or expenditure by the Director of the National Park Service to be used in such first fiscal year as follows:

"(3) The amount allocated to each unit under this paragraph for each fiscal year shall be a fraction of the total allocation to all units under this paragraph. The fraction for each unit shall be determined by dividing the user fees and admission fees collected under this section at that unit during the prior fiscal year by the total of user fees and admission fees collected under this section at all units during the prior fiscal year.

"(k) When authorized by the head of the collecting agency, volunteers at designated areas may sell permits, and collect fees, authorized or established pursuant to this section. The head of such agency shall insure that such volunteers have adequate training regarding (1) the sale of permits and the collection of fees, (2) the purposes and resources of the areas in which they are assigned, and (3) the provision of assistance and information to visitors to the designated area. The Secretary shall require a surety bond for any such volunteer performing services under this subsection. Funds available to the collecting agency may be used to cover the cost of any such surety bond. The head of the collecting agency may enter into arrangements with qualified public or private entities pursuant to which such entities may sell (without cost to the United States) annual admission permits (including Golden Eagle Passports) at any appropriate location. Such arrangements shall require each such entity to reimburse the United States for the full amount to be received from the sale of such permits at or before the agency delivers the permits to such entity for sale.

"(l)(1) Where the National Park Service provides transportation to view all or a portion of any national park, the Director of the National Park Service may impose a charge for such service in lieu of an admission fee under this section. The amount of any fee imposed under this paragraph shall not exceed the maximum amount of the admission fee which could otherwise be imposed under subsection (a).

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, half of the charges imposed under paragraph (1) shall be retained by the national park at which the service was provided. The remainder shall be covered into the special account referred to in subsection (i) in the same manner as receipts from fees collected pursuant to this section. Fifty percent of the amount retained shall be expended only for maintenance of transportation systems at the park where the charge was imposed. The remaining fifty percent of the retained amount shall be expended only for activities related to resource protection at such park.".

(4) Title I of Public Law 96-514 is amended by striking out the following: "Notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law 90-401, revenues from recreation fee collections by Federal agencies shall hereafter be paid into the Land and Water Conservation Fund, to be available for appropriation for any or all purposes authorized by the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965, as amended, without regard to the source of such revenues.".

TITLE VIII—COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

SEC. 8001. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING SALE OF CERTAIN LOANS.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) a recent change in accounting procedures proposed by the Office of Management and Budget and concurred in by the Congressional Budget Office with regard to accounting for the proceeds of loans sold with recourse by an agency of the Federal Government has had a significant effect and seriously limited the policymaking function of the Congress;

(2) this change was accepted by the Congressional Budget Office without consultation with committees affected by such change; and

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is therefore the sense of the Congress—

(1) that the Congressional Budget Office should reverse its decision on accounting for loans sold with recourse by the Veterans' Administration; and

(2) that, consistent with section 7 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1988, any change in the assets sales policy of the Veterans' Administration should not be considered in future budget resolutions as a means of achieving deficit reduction.

"(2)(A) In any case in which the Secretary, in any claim before the Secretary for benefits under this title, makes a determination favorable to the claimant and the claimant was represented by an attorney in connection with such claim, the attorney, subject to paragraph (3), shall be entitled to recover a fee to compensate the attorney for the services performed by the attorney in connection with such claim in the manner and amount provided in this paragraph.

"(B) To the extent that the claimant, as a result of such determination, is entitled to past-due benefits under this title that would have been payable to the claimant without regard to sections 224 and 1127(a)—

"(i) the amount of the fee recoverable by the attorney shall be equal to the lesser of—

"(I) 25 percent of the total amount of such past-due benefits, or

"(II) $4,000 (subject to subparagraph (F)), and

"(ii) the Secretary shall, notwithstanding sections 205(i) and 207, certify for payment the amount of any past-due benefits payable (after the application of sections 224 and 1127(a)) in the form of a check payable to both the claimant and the attorney, which shall be sent to the attorney not later than 60 days after the date of the determination, and shall send to the attorney—

"(II) a form which would constitute, upon completion and notarization by a notary public, a sworn affidavit by the attorney and by the claimant (or the claimant's representative payee if one has been appointed under section 205(j)) that, upon payment of the proceeds from such check to the claimant, not more than the amount specified in such notice as the amount recoverable by the attorney has been retained by such attorney.

Any such amount so retained by the attorney shall be treated as recoverable by the attorney in accordance with this paragraph; except that, if the attorney fails without good cause to send such affidavit (as so completed and so notarized) to the Secretary within 15 days after receipt of such check, such amount shall not be so treated, and the attorney shall not be recognized or entitled to represent claimants before the Secretary so long as such failure continues.

"(C) To the extent that the favorable determination is made with respect to benefits which were continued for any period pursuant to section 223(g)—

"(D) If the favorable determination is not of entitlement to past-due benefits and does not relate to benefits the payment of which was continued pursuant to section 223(g)—

"(i) the amount of the fee recoverable by the attorney shall be equal to the lesser of—

"(I) 300 percent of (a) the primary insurance amount of the claimant if the favorable determination entitles the claimant to benefits based on his or her own wages and self-employment income, or (b) the monthly benefit of the claimant (before any reductions or deductions) if such determination entitles the claimant to benefits based on another person's wages and self-employment income, or

"(II) $4,000 (subject to subparagraph (F)),

"(ii) the Secretary shall certify for payment to the attorney (out of the Trust Fund from which the claimant is entitled to benefits as a result of the favorable determination) the amount recoverable by the attorney, and

"(iii) upon payment to the attorney pursuant to clause (ii), the amount of the fee recoverable by the attorney shall be treated as an overpayment to the claimant, except that section 204(b) shall not apply, and except that such overpayment, unless the claimant and the Secretary agree otherwise, shall be repaid only by means of deducting, notwithstanding sections 205(i) and 207, 10 percent of each monthly benefit payable to the claimant for months beginning after the month in which the determination is made, until the total of such deductions equals the amount of the overpayment;

"(F) If the Secretary pursuant to section 215(i) increases benefits effective with December of any calendar year, effective for determinations made on or after January 1 of the next calendar year, the Secretary shall increase the amounts specified in subparagraphs (B)(i)(II), (C)(i)(II), and (D)(i)(II) (as in effect immediately before such January 1) by the same percentage as the percentage of the increase in benefits effective with such December under section 215(i) and publish such amount as so increased in the Federal Register.

"(3)(A) Upon a written request to the Secretary by the claimant, or by the administrative law judge or other person who made the favorable determination (but only on the basis of extraordinary evidence of attorney failure to adequately represent the claimant's interest), to reduce the amount otherwise recoverable by the attorney under subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of paragraph (2), or upon a written request to the Secretary by the attorney to increase the amount recoverable by the attorney under subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of paragraph (2), and after providing the claimant, the attorney, and such administrative law judge or other person with reasonable notice of such request and an opportunity to submit written information in favor of or in opposition to such request, the Secretary shall provide for review of such amount in accordance with subparagraph (B).

"(ii) In the case of a request under subparagraph (A) by the administrative law judge or other person who made the favorable determination, a review under subparagraph (A) of the amount otherwise recoverable by the attorney under paragraph (2) shall be conducted by the Secretary or by another administrative law judge or other person who is designated by the Secretary and has supervisory authority over the administrative law judge or other person who made the favorable determination.

"(C) Upon completion of the review pursuant to this paragraph, the administrative law judge or other person conducting the review pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall affirm, modify, or disallow the amount otherwise recoverable by the attorney under paragraph (2). If such amount is so disallowed, the Secretary shall certify for payment benefits to any claimant as provided in this title without regard to paragraph (2). Any such amount as so affirmed or modified shall be considered the amount recoverable by the attorney under paragraph (2).

"(4) In any case to which paragraph (2) applies, no fee other than the amount recoverable by the attorney under that paragraph may be payable or certified for payment for the representation involved; and (in any such case) the term 'maximum fee' as used in paragraph (6) means the amount so recoverable.

"(5) The Secretary shall certify benefits to any claimant for payment as provided in this title without regard to paragraph (2) if the attorney submits to the Secretary a written waiver of the attorney's rights under paragraph (2) before the date on which the Secretary certifies payment to the attorney of the fee recoverable by the attorney.

"(G) an individual who resides in an area of the State where the program is not available.

In the case of a two-parent family to which section 407 applies, the exemption under subparagraph (C) shall apply only to one parent or other caretaker relative; but the State may at its option make such exemption inapplicable in any such case to both of the parents or relatives involved (and require their participation in the program, at least one of them on a full-time basis) if appropriate child care is guaranteed in accordance with the applicable provisions of such subparagraph.

"(5) If the caretaker relative or any dependent child in the family is already attending (in good standing) a school or a course of vocational or technical training designed to lead to employment at the time he or she would otherwise commence participation (as a mandatory participant or volunteer) in the program under this section, such attendance shall constitute satisfactory participation in the educational or training component of the program (by that caretaker or child) so long as it continues; and the family support plan (entered into under subsection (f)) shall so indicate. The costs of such school or training shall not constitute federally reimbursable expenses for purposes of section 403 (but this sentence shall not prevent the State from providing or making reimbursement for the cost of day care which is necessary for such attendance in accordance with section 402(g)(1)).

"(d) PRIORITIES.—(1) To the extent that the State's resources do not permit the inclusion in the program of all mandatory participants and volunteers, the selection of the families to whom services are to be provided under the program under this section shall be made (subject to subsection (l)(3) and paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection) in accordance with the following priorities:

"(A) First priority shall be given to volunteers who are described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of subsection (c)(3).

"(B) Second priority shall be given to mandatory participants who are described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of subsection (c)(3).

"(C) Third priority shall be given to mandatory participants (not described in subparagraph (B)) in families with older children.

"(D) Fourth priority shall be given to volunteers not described in subparagraph (A).

"(E) Fifth priority shall be given to all other mandatory participants.

For purposes of subparagraph (C), a family 'with older children' is a family in which the youngest child is within two years of being ineligible for family support supplements because of his or her age.

"(2) Among the mandatory participants described in subparagraph (B), (C), or (E) of paragraph (1), first consideration shall be given to those who actively seek to participate in the program.

"(3) In the case of a State which provides satisfactory assurances that it will make available the resources to serve all mandatory participants and volunteers within a 3-year period after the effective date of this section, paragraph (1) shall not apply until the expiration of such 3-year period.

"(e) ORIENTATION.—The State agency shall provide each applicant for family support supplements with orientation to the program under this section, including full information about the opportunities offered by the program and the obligations of participants in the program (and including descriptions of day care services and available health coverage transition options). Such orientation shall also be available at any time to recipients of family support supplements who did not receive orientation under this subsection at the time of their initial application for such supplements or who need additional information about the program.

"(f) ASSESSMENT AND FAMILY SUPPORT PLAN.—The State agency shall make an initial assessment of the educational needs, skills, and employability of each participant in the program under this section, including a review of the family circumstances and of the needs of the children as well as those of the adult caretaker; and on the basis of such assessment the State agency and the participating members of the family (or the adult caretaker with respect to any such participant who is a minor) shall negotiate a family support plan for the family. The family support plan shall set forth and describe all of the activities in which participants in the family will take part under the program, and shall, to the maximum extent possible and consistent with this section, reflect the respective preferences of such participants.

"(g) AGENCY-CLIENT AGREEMENT AND CASE MANAGEMENT.—(1) Following the initial assessment and the development of the family support plan with respect to any family under this section, the State agency and the participating members of the family (or the caretaker relative in the family with respect to participants who are minors) shall negotiate and enter into an agency-client agreement including a commitment by the participants (or caretaker) to participate in the program in accordance with the family support plan, specifying in detail the activities in which the participants will take part and the conditions and duration of such participation, and detailing all of the activities which the State will conduct and the services which the State will provide in the course of such participation. The participants (or caretaker) shall be given such assistance as may be required in reviewing and understanding the family support plan and the agency-client agreement.

"(2)(A) Each participant shall be guaranteed an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency in the event of a dispute involving the contents of the family support plan, the contents or signing of the agency-client agreement, the nature or extent of his or her participation in the program as specified therein, or any other aspect of such participation which is provided for under this section (including a dispute involving the imposition of sanctions under subsection (l) and the participant's right to conciliation before any such sanction is imposed); and the agency-client agreement shall so provide.

"(B) In no case shall any agency-client agreement entered into pursuant to this subsection give rise to a cause of action against the Federal Government or any officer or agency thereof if any party to such agreement fails to observe its terms.

"(3) The State agency shall assign to each participating family a member of the agency staff to provide case management services to the family; and the case manager so assigned shall be responsible for (A) obtaining or brokering, on behalf of the family, any other services which may be needed to assure the family's effective participation, (B) monitoring the progress of the participant, and (C) periodically reviewing and renegotiating the family support plan and the agency-client agreement as appropriate. Amounts expended in providing case management services under this paragraph shall be considered, for purposes of section 403(a)(3)(C), to be expenditures for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan.

"(h) RANGE OF SERVICES AND ACTIVITIES.—(1) In carrying out the program under this section, each State must make available a broad range of services and activities calculated to aid in carrying out the purpose of this section, specifically including (subject to the next to last sentence of this paragraph and to paragraph (2))—

"(A) high school or equivalent education (combined with training when appropriate) designed specifically for participants who do not have a high school diploma, except in the case of a participant who demonstrates a basic literacy level and whose family support plan identifies a long-term employment goal that does not require a high school diploma;

"(B) remedial education to achieve a basic literacy level, instruction in English as a second language, and specialized advanced education in appropriate cases;

"(C) group and individual job search as described in subsection (k);

"(D) on-the-job training;

"(E) skills training;

"(F) work supplementation programs as provided in subsection (i);

"(G) community work experience programs as provided in subsection (j);

"(H) job readiness activities to help prepare participants for work;

"(I) counseling, information, and referral for participants experiencing personal and family problems which may be affecting their ability to work;

"(J) job development, job placement, and follow-up services to assist participants in securing and retaining employment and advancement as needed; and

"(K) other education and training activities as determined by the State and allowed by regulations of the Secretary.

The State must in any event make available the services and aspect to all of the services and activities described in this subsection.

"(2) Any participant lacking a high school diploma shall be offered the opportunity to participate in a program which addresses the education needs identified in the participant's initial assessment, including high school or equivalent education designed specifically for participants who do not have a high school diploma, remedial education to achieve a basic literacy level, or instruction in English as a Second Language; and both the family support plan and the agency-client agreement shall so provide. Any other services or activities to which such a participant is assigned under the agreement may not be permitted to interfere with his or her participation in an appropriate education program under this paragraph.

"(3) Children in participating families who are not themselves participants in the program under this section shall be encouraged to take part in any of the education or training programs available under the program; and the State must also provide to such children additional services specifically designed to help them stay in school (including financial incentives as appropriate), complete their high school education, and obtain marketable job skills (including services provided under a demonstration program conducted pursuant to section 1115(b)(1)). Training activities in which such children participate may not, however, be permitted to interfere with their school attendance.

"(4)(A) Each assignment of a participant under the program shall be consistent with the physical capacity, skills, experience, health, family responsibilities, and place of residence of such participant.

"(B) Before assigning a participant to any activity under the program, the State shall assure that—

"(i) appropriate standards for health, safety, and other conditions are applicable to participation in such activity;

"(ii) the conditions of participation in such activity are reasonable, taking into account the geographic region, the residence of the participant, and the proficiency of the participant; and

"(iii) the participant will not be required, without his or her consent, to travel an unreasonable distance from his or her home or remain away from such home overnight.

"(5) No assignment under the program shall result in—

"(A) the displacement of any currently employed worker or position (including partial displacement such as a reduction in the hours of nonovertime work, wages, or employment benefits), or result in the impairment of existing contracts for services or collective bargaining agreements;

"(B) the employment or assignment of a participant or the filling of a position when (i) any other individual is on layoff from the same or any equivalent position, or (ii) the employer has terminated the employment of any regular employee or otherwise reduced its workforce with the intention of filling the vacancy so created with a participant subsidized under this section; or

"(C) any infringement of the promotional opportunities of any currently employed individual.

"(6) The wage rate for any position to which a participant is assigned shall be at least equal to the current pay scale for that position, or, if there is no current pay scale for that position, shall be at least equal to the greater of the applicable Federal or State minimum wage; and appropriate worker's compensation and tort claims protection shall be provided to all participants on the same basis as such compensation and protection are provided to other employed individuals in the State.

"(7)(A) Each State agency shall establish and maintain a grievance procedure for dealing with complaints about its programs and activities under this section from participants, subgrantees, subcontractors, and other interested persons. Hearings on any complaint shall be conducted within 30 days after the date on which the complaint is filed and a decision shall be made no later than 60 days after such date.

"(B) The decision of the State agency may be appealed to the Secretary under the procedures established in subparagraph (C), and the complaint itself may be appealed to the Secretary under such procedures if the State agency fails to make a decision within the prescribed 60-day period.

"(C)(i) Whenever an appeal to the Secretary, alleging that paragraph (4), (5), (6), or (8) has been violated, is made under subparagraph (B), a copy of the complaint shall be transmitted at the same time to the entity alleged to have committed the violation. An opportunity shall be afforded to such entity to review the complaint and to submit a reply to the Secretary within 15 days after receiving the copy of such complaint.

"(ii) An official who shall be designated by the Secretary shall review any complaint submitted in accordance with clause (i), and conduct such investigation as may be necessary, to ascertain the accuracy of the information set forth or alleged and to determine whether there is substantial evidence that the affected activities fail to comply with paragraph (4), (5), (6), or (8). Such official shall report his findings and recommendations to the Secretary within 60 days after commencing the review and investigation.

"(iii) The Secretary, within 45 days after receiving the report under clause (ii) shall issue a final determination as to whether a violation of paragraph (4), (5), (6), or (8) has occurred.

"(iv) The Secretary shall institute proceedings to compel the repayment of any funds determined to have been expended in violation of paragraph (4), (5), (6), or (8).

"(D) The existence of the remedies provided by this section shall not preclude any person who alleges that an action of a State agency violates any of the provisions of this section from instituting a civil action or pursuing any other remedy authorized under Federal, State, or local law.

"(8) The State may not require a participant in the program to accept a position under the program (as work supplementation or otherwise) if accepting the position would result in a net loss of income (including the insurance value of any health benefits) to the participant or his or her family.

"(9) Program activities under this section shall be coordinated in each State with programs operated under the Job Training Partnership Act and with any other relevant employment, training, and education programs available in that State. Appropriate components of the State's plan developed under subsection (b)(1) which relate to job training and workplace preparation shall be consistent with the coordination criteria specified in the Governor's coordination and special services plan required under section 121 of the Job Training Partnership Act. The State plan so developed shall be submitted to the State job training coordinating council not less than 90 days prior to its submission to the Secretary, for the purpose of review and comment by the council on those provisions of the plan related to delivery of job training services and of coordinating activities under this section with similar activities under the Job Training Partnership Act.

"(10) Program activities under this section shall be coordinated in each State with existing early childhood education programs in that State.

"(11) In carrying out the program under this section, the State may enter into appropriate contracts and other arrangements with public and private agencies and organizations for the provision or conduct of any services or activities made available under the program.

"(i) Work Supplementation Programs.—(1) Any State may institute a work supplementation program under which such State, to the extent it considers appropriate, may reserve the sums which would otherwise be payable to participants in the program under this section as family support supplements under the State plan approved under this part and use such sums instead for the purpose of providing and subsidizing jobs for such participants (as described in paragraph (3)(C)(i) and (ii)), as an alternative to the supplements which would otherwise be so payable to them under such plan.

"(2)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, Federal funds may be paid to a State under this part, subject to the provisions of this section, with respect to expenditures incurred in operating a work supplementation program under this subsection.

"(B) Nothing in this part, or in any State plan approved under this part, shall be construed to prevent a State from operating (on such terms and conditions and in such cases as the State may find to be necessary or appropriate) a work supplementation program in accordance with this subsection.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State may adjust the levels of the standards of need under the State plan to the extent the State determines such adjustments to be necessary and appropriate for carrying out a work supplementation program under this subsection.

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State operating a work supplementation program under this subsection may provide that the need standards in effect in those areas of the State in which such program is in operation may be different from the need standards in effect in the areas in which such program is not in operation, and such State may provide that the need standards for categories of recipients of family support supplements may vary among such categories to the extent the State determines to be appropriate on the basis of ability to participate in the work supplementation program.

"(E) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State may make further adjustments in the amounts of the family support supplements paid under the plan to different categories of recipients (as determined under subparagraph (D)) in order to offset increases in benefits from needs-related programs (other than the State plan approved under this part), to the extent the State determines such adjustments to be necessary and appropriate to further the purposes of the work supplementation program.

"(F) In determining the amounts to be reserved and used for providing and subsidizing jobs under this subsection as described in paragraph (1), the State may use a sampling methodology.

"(G) Notwithstanding section 402(a)(8) or any other provision of law, a State operating a work supplementation program under this subsection may reduce or eliminate the amount of earned income to be disregarded under the State plan to the extent the State determines such a reduction or elimination to be necessary and appropriate to further the purposes of the work supplementation program.

"(3)(A) A work supplementation program operated by a State under this subsection shall provide that any individual who is an eligible individual (as determined under subparagraph (B)) shall take a supplemented job (as defined in subparagraph (C)) to the extent that supplemented jobs are available under the program. Payments by the State to individuals or employers under the program shall be treated as expenditures incurred by the State for family support supplements under the State plan for purposes of section 403(a)(1) and (2), except as limited by paragraph (4).

"(B) For purposes of this subsection, an eligible individual is an individual (not exempt under subsection (c)(4)) who is in a category which the State determines should be eligible to participate in the work supplementation program, and who would, at the time of his or her placement in the job involved, be eligible for family support supplements under the State plan if such State did not have a work supplementation program in effect.

"(C) For purposes of this subsection, a supplemented job is—

"(i) a job provided to an eligible individual by the State or local agency administering the State plan under this part; or

"(ii) a job provided to an eligible individual by any other employer for which all or part of the wages are paid by such State or local agency.

A State may provide or subsidize any job under the program under this section which such State determines to be appropriate.

"(D) At the option of the State, individuals who hold supplemented jobs under a State's work supplementation program shall be exempt from the retrospective budgeting requirements imposed pursuant to section 402(a)(13)(A)(ii) (and the amount of the aid which is payable to the family of such individual for any month, or which would be so payable but for the family's participation in the work supplementation program, shall be determined on the basis of the income and other relevant circumstances in that month).

"(E) Paragraphs (4) through (8) of subsection (h) shall apply with respect to assignments of eligible individuals to supplemented jobs under this subsection.

"(4) The amount of the Federal payment to a State under section 403(a) for expenditures incurred in making payments to individuals and employers under a work supplementation program under this subsection shall not exceed an amount equal to the amount which would otherwise be payable under paragraph (1) or (2) of such section if the family of each individual employed in the program had received the maximum amount of family support supplements payable under the State plan to such a family with no income (without regard to adjustments under paragraph (2) of this subsection) for a period of months equal to the lesser of (A) nine months, or (B) the number of months in which such individual was employed in such program. Expenditures so incurred shall be considered to have been made for family support supplements under the State plan for purposes of section 403(a)(1) and (2).

"(5)(A) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as requiring the State or local agency administering the State plan to provide employee status to an eligible individual to whom it provides a job under the work supplementation program (or with respect to whom it provides all or part of the wages paid to the individual by another entity under such program), or as requiring any State or local agency to provide that an eligible individual filling a job position provided by another entity under such program be provided employee status by such entity, during the first 13 weeks such individual fills that position.

"(B) Wages paid under a work supplementation program shall be considered to be earned income for purposes of any provision of law.

"(6) Any State which chooses to operate a work supplementation program under this subsection must provide that any individual who participates in such program, and any child or relative of such individual (or other individual living in the same household as such individual) who would be eligible for family support supplements under the State plan approved under this part if such State did not have a work supplementation program, shall be considered individuals receiving family support supplements under the State plan approved under this part for purposes of eligibility for medical assistance under the State plan approved under title XIX.

"(j) Community Work Experience Programs.—(1)(A) Any State which chooses to do so may establish a community work experience program in accordance with this subsection. The purpose of the community work experience program is to provide experience and training for individuals not otherwise able to obtain employment, in order to assist them to move into regular employment. Community work experience programs shall be designed to improve the employability of participants through actual work experience and training and to enable individuals employed under community work experience programs to move promptly into regular public or private employment. Community work experience programs shall be limited to projects which serve a useful public purpose in fields such as health, social service, environmental protection, education, urban and rural development and redevelopment, welfare, recreation, public facilities, public safety, and day care. To the extent possible, the prior training, experience, and skills of a recipient shall be used in making appropriate work experience assignments. Participants in a program under this subsection may not fill established unfilled position vacancies.

"(B) A State which elects to establish a community work experience program under this subsection shall operate such program so that each participant (as determined by the State) either—

"(i) works and undergoes training for a period not exceeding 6 months, with the maximum number of hours that any such individual may be required to work and undergo training in any month being a number equal to the amount of the family support supplements payable with respect to the family of which such individual is a member under the State plan approved under this part, divided by the current hourly pay scale for the position in which the participant works, or (if there is no current pay scale for that position) by the greater of the applicable Federal or State minimum wage (and the portion of a recipient's benefit for which the State is reimbursed by a child support payment shall not be taken into account in determining the number of hours that such individual may be required to work); or

"(ii) performs unpaid work experience and training (for a combined total of not more than 30 hours a week) for a period not exceeding 3 months.

Paragraphs (4) through (7) of subsection (h) shall apply with respect to the assignment of participants to positions under this section.

"(C) Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed as authorizing the payment of family support supplements under this part as compensation for work performed, nor shall a participant be entitled to a salary or to any other work or training expense provided under any other provision of law by reason of his participation in a program under this subsection.

"(D) Nothing in this part or in any State plan approved under this part shall be construed to prevent a State from operating (on such terms and conditions and in such cases as the State may find to be necessary or appropriate) a community work experience program in accordance with this subsection.

"(E) Participants in community work experience programs under this subsection may perform work in the public interest (which otherwise meets the requirements of this section) for a Federal office or agency with its consent, and, notwithstanding section 1342 of title 31, United States Code, or any other provision of law, such agency may accept such services, but such participants shall not be considered to be Federal employees for any purpose.

"(F) If at the conclusion of his or her participation in a community work experience program the individual has not become employed, a reassessment with respect to such individual shall be made and a new family support plan developed as provided in subsection (f). In no event shall any individual who has completed the work and training activities described in clause (i) of subparagraph (B), or the work experience and training activities described in clause (ii) of such subparagraph, be required to repeat such activities or be reassigned to perform work or undergo training under either such clause.

"(2) The State shall provide coordination between a community work experience program operated pursuant to this subsection, any program of job search under subsection (k), and the other work-related activities under the program established by this section so as to insure that job placement will have priority over participation in the community work experience program.

"(3) In the case of any State which makes expenditures in the form described in paragraph (1) under its State plan approved under section 402, expenditures for the provision of training under a program under this subsection, for purposes of section 403(a)(4) (and expenditures for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, for purposes of section 403(a)(3)), may not include the cost of making or acquiring materials or equipment in connection with such training services or the cost of supervision of work or training under such program, and may include only such other costs attributable to such program as are permitted by the Secretary.

"(k) Job Search.—(1) The State agency shall establish and carry out a program of job search for applicants and participants in the program under this section.

"(2) Participants in the program under this section shall be encouraged and may be required to take part in job search under this subsection, at such times, for such periods, and in such manner as the State agency determines (in each particular case) will be most effective in serving the special needs and interests of the individual involved and in carrying out the purpose of this section. Job search by an applicant may be required or provided for while his or her application is being processed; and job search by a participant may be required or provided for after his or her initial assessment, after his or her education or training, and at other appropriate times during his or her participation in the program under this section, as may be set forth in the agency-client agreement entered into between such individual and the State agency under subsection (g)(1) and as otherwise provided by the State agency. No requirement imposed by the State under the preceding provisions of this paragraph may be used as a reason for any delay in making a determination of an individual's eligibility for family support supplements or in issuing a payment to or on behalf of any individual who is otherwise eligible for such supplements.

"(3) Participation by an individual in job search under this subsection, without participation in one or more other services or activities offered under the program under this section, shall not be sufficient to qualify as participation in the program for any of the purposes of this section after it has continued for 8 weeks or longer without the individual obtaining a job. In any such case (after 8 weeks of job search without obtaining a job) the individual must engage in training, education, or other activities designed to improve his or her prospects for employment; and the family support plan developed under subsection (f) shall so provide.

"(l) Sanctions.—(1) If any mandatory participant in the program under this section fails without good cause to comply with any requirement imposed with respect to his or her participation in such program—

"(A) the needs of such participant (whether or not section 407 applies) shall not be taken into account in making the determination with respect to his or her family under section 402(a)(7), and

"(B) if such participant is a member of a family which is eligible for family support supplements by reason of section 407, and his or her spouse is not participating in the program, the needs of such spouse shall also not be taken into account in making such determination.

The sanction described in subparagraph (A) (and the sanction described in subparagraph (B) if applicable) shall continue until the participant's failure to comply ceases; except that such sanction shall continue for a minimum of 3 months if the failure to comply is the participant's second or a subsequent such failure.

"(2) No sanction shall be imposed under paragraph (1) until appropriate notice thereof has been provided to the participant involved, and until conciliation efforts have been made to discuss and resolve the participant's failure to comply and to determine whether or not good cause for such failure existed. In any event, when a failure to comply has continued for 3 months the State agency shall promptly remind the participant in writing of his or her option to end the sanction by terminating such failure.

"(3) If a volunteer drops out of the program under this section after having commenced participation in such program, he or she shall thereafter be given no priority under subsection (d).

"(m) REGULATIONS.—Within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary shall issue proposed regulations for the purpose of implementing and carrying out the program under this section, including regulations establishing uniform data collection requirements; and within 9 months after such date the Secretary shall publish final regulations for that purpose. Regulations under this subsection shall be developed by the Secretary in consultation with the responsible State agencies described in subsection (b)(3).

"(n) PERFORMANCE STANDARDS.—(1) Within one year after the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary, in consultation with the Congress, the Secretary of Labor, the States and localities, educators, and other interested persons, shall develop and publish performance standards for the program under this section. Such standards shall at a minimum—

"(A) provide methods for measuring the degree to which States are targeting their programs to those individuals within each priority group (as described in subsection (d)) who will have the most difficulty finding employment;

"(B) provide methods for determining whether States are providing intensive services under the program, tailored to the individual needs of participants and fully calculated to produce self-sufficiency;

"(C) provide methods for measuring the degree to which States are placing strong emphasis on participation by volunteers among the priority groups described in subsection (d);

"(D) measure the cost effectiveness of the employment portion of the program and the welfare savings that result from the program;

"(E) establish expectations for placement rates, including the minimum rate at which participants within each priority group (as described in subsection (d)) are to be placed in jobs or complete their education or both;

"(F) take into account the extent to which the program results in job retention by participants, case closures, educational improvements, and placement in jobs that provide health benefits;

"(G) give appropriate recognition to the likelihood that unemployment and other economic factors will influence the success of the employment program; and

"(H) take into account such other factors as are deemed important.

The performance standards so developed and published shall be periodically reviewed by the Secretary and modified (in consultation with the Congress) to the extent necessary to reflect the continuing implementation of the program.

"(2) The Secretary shall develop and transmit to the Congress, for appropriate legislative action, a proposal for modifying the rate of the Federal payments to States under section 403(a)(4) so as to reflect the relative effectiveness of the various States in carrying out the program under this section and achieving its purpose.

"(o) CONTINUING EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall provide for the continuing evaluation of the programs established under this section by the several States, including their effectiveness in achieving the purpose of this section and their impact on other related programs. The Secretary shall also—

"(1) provide for the conduct of research on ways to increase the effectiveness of such programs, including research on—

"(A) the effectiveness of giving priority to volunteers,

"(B) appropriate strategies for assisting two-parent families,

"(C) the wage rates of individuals placed in jobs as a result of such programs,

"(D) the approaches that are most effective in meeting the needs of specific groups and types of participants (such as teenage parents, older parents, and families including disabled persons), and

"(E) the effect of targeting on families which include children below 6 years of age; and

"(2) provide technical assistance to States, localities, schools, and employers who may participate in the programs and who request or require such assistance.

"(p) UNIFORM REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary shall establish uniform reporting requirements under which each State will be required periodically to furnish such information and data as the Secretary may need to ensure that the purposes and provisions of this section are being effectively carried out, including at a minimum the average monthly number of families participating in the program under this section, the types of such families, the amounts expended under the program (as family support supplements and otherwise) with respect to such families, and the length of time for which such families are assisted. The information and data so furnished shall be separately stated with respect to each of the services and activities enumerated in subsection (h) and with respect to each of the activities described in subsections (i), (j), and (k).".

Demonstration projects under this paragraph shall meet such conditions and requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe, and no such project shall be conducted for a period of more than 3 years.

"(B) The Secretary shall consider all applications received from States desiring to conduct demonstration projects under this paragraph, shall approve up to 10 applications involving projects which appear likely to contribute significantly to the achievement of the purpose of this paragraph, and shall make grants to the States whose applications are approved to assist them in carrying out such projects.

"(C) The Secretary shall submit to the Congress with respect to each project undertaken by a State under this paragraph, after such project has been carried out for one year and again when such project is completed, a detailed evaluation of the project and of its contribution to the achievement of the purpose of this paragraph.

"(3)(A) In order to permit States to test whether (and the extent to which) eliminating the 100-hour rule under section 407, and requiring parents under that section to accept any reasonable job offers while preserving the eligibility of their families for aid under the applicable State plan approved under section 402, would effectively encourage such parents to enter the permanent work force and thereby significantly reduce program costs, up to 5 States and localities may undertake and carry out demonstration projects under which—

"(i) each parent receiving aid pursuant to section 407 is required to accept any reasonable full- or part-time job which is offered to him or her, without regard to the amount of the parent's resulting earnings as compared to the level of the family's aid under the applicable State plan, and

"(ii) the family's eligibility under the plan is preserved notwithstanding the parent's resulting earnings, so long as such earnings (after the application of section 402(a)(8)) do not exceed the applicable State standard of need, without regard to the 100-hour rule or any other durational standard that might be applied in defining unemployment for purposes of determining such eligibility.

"(B) The Secretary shall consider all applications received from States desiring to conduct demonstration projects under this paragraph, shall approve up to 5 applications involving projects which appear likely to contribute significantly to the achievement of the purpose of this paragraph, and shall make grants to the States whose applications are approved to assist them in carrying out such projects.

"(C) Each demonstration project approved under this paragraph shall provide for the payment of aid under the applicable State plan, as though section 407 had been modified to reflect the provisions of clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) but shall otherwise be carried out in accordance with all of the requirements and conditions of section 407 (and any related requirements and conditions under part A of title IV); and each such project shall meet such other requirements and conditions as the Secretary shall prescribe.

"(4)(A) Any demonstration project undertaken pursuant to this subsection—

"(i) must be designed to improve the financial well-being of families with children or otherwise improve the operation of the program or programs involved; and

"(ii) may not permit modifications in any program which would have the effect of disadvantaging children in need.

"(B) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to make grants with respect to the demonstration projects which are provided for under any of the preceding paragraphs of this subsection (and for which an authorization in specific dollar amounts is not included in the paragraph involved).".

PART 2—DAY CARE, TRANSPORTATION, AND OTHER WORK-RELATED EXPENSES

SEC. 9111. PAYMENT OF EXPENSES BY STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Section 402 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g)(1)(A) Each State shall, for each family, either—

"(i) provide day care for each dependent child, and incapacitated individual living in the same home as a dependent child, receiving family support supplements under the State plan and requiring such care, or if and to the extent that such care (or reimbursement for the costs thereof) is determined by the State agency to be (I) directly related to an individual's participation in work, education, or training (including participation as a mandatory participant or volunteer in the program under section 416, and including participation in other work, education, or training by individuals who are not participating in such program by reason of exemptions granted under any of the subparagraphs in section 416(c)(4)), (II) reasonably necessary for such participation, and (III) cost-effective. Amounts expended under the preceding provisions of this subsection (in providing day care directly, or in making reimbursement for the costs of such care), to the extent that such amounts do not exceed $175 per month for any child age 2 or over or $200 per month for any infant under age 2, shall be considered, for purposes of section 403(a) (1) and (2), to be amounts expended as aid in the form of family support supplements under the State plan (and Federal contributions may be made under section 403(a) with respect to amounts so expended only to that extent).

"(ii) reimburse the caretaker relative in the family (in advance whenever possible) for the costs of such care incurred in any month,

"(B) No amount shall be expended under subparagraph (A) for any child care services involving more than 2 children at the same time unless such services meet applicable standards of State and local law, and in any event unless such services meet standards, established by the State, which at a minimum ensure basic health and safety protections.

"(C) Reimbursement for the costs of day care under subparagraph (A)(ii) may be accomplished through contracts or certificates, or through the disregarding of such costs from the earned income of the family (within the applicable dollar limitations set forth in subparagraph (A)) as though such disregarding were specifically provided for in section 402(a)(8) immediately after the disregards provided for in clauses (ii) and (iii) thereof (and were applied to both applicants and recipients but only with respect to earned income not otherwise disregarded under the preceding provisions of that section). No change made by a State in its method of reimbursing day care costs may have the effect of disadvantaging individuals or families receiving aid under the State plan on the date of the enactment of this subsection, by reducing their income or otherwise.

"(D) For purposes of the first sentence of subparagraph (A), day care shall be considered 'cost-effective' only if it is furnished within the applicable dollar limitations set forth in the second sentence of such subparagraph; but nothing in this subsection shall be construed as preventing any State from making reimbursement from its own funds (without any Federal contribution under section 403(a)) for day care which is not furnished within such limitations.

"(2)(A) In the case of an individual participating in the program of education, training, and work under section 416 (including participation in the form of job search under subsection (k) thereof), the State (in addition to providing day care or reimbursing the costs thereof as provided in paragraph (1)) shall reimburse the participant (in advance whenever possible) for transportation and other work-related costs incurred in any month, in an amount (subject to subparagraph (B)) not exceeding the dollar amount then in effect (for purposes of disregarding earned income) under section 402(a)(8)(A)(ii).

"(B) In the case of a participant who must travel 100 miles or more to reach his or her education or training site under the program, the reimbursement for transportation and other work-related costs under subparagraph (A) may be in an amount up to twice the dollar amount referred to in that subparagraph.

"(3) The Federal contribution with respect to day care, transportation, and other work-related costs incurred by a State under this subsection shall be determined under section 403(a) (1) or (2) as though such costs had been incurred in paying aid in the form of family support supplements, rather than under section 403(a) (3) or (4).

"(4) The value of any day care provided (or any amount received as reimbursement for day care costs incurred) under paragraph (1)—

"(A) shall not be treated as income of any person for purposes of any other Federal or federally-supported program which bases eligibility for or the amount of benefits upon need, and

"(B) may not be claimed as an employment-related expense for purposes of the credit under section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.".

(b) Continuation After Eligibility for Aid Ceases.—(1) Subparagraph (A) of section 402(g)(1) of such Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The caretaker relative of any dependent child or incapacitated individual whose family ceases to be eligible for family support supplements under the State plan as of the close of any month (if at that time the family has earnings) shall continue to be entitled to reimbursement for the costs of any day care (subject to the applicable dollar limitations specified in the succeeding sentence) which is determined by the State agency to be reasonably necessary for his or her employment, for a period of 6 months after the close of such month, under a sliding scale formula established by the State which shall be based on the family's ability to pay (and under which such applicable dollar limitations are appropriately reduced to reflect such ability).".

(2) Subparagraph (D) of section 402(g)(1) of such Act (as so added) is amended by striking out "second" and inserting in lieu thereof "third".

(c) Demonstration Authority: Projects to Encourage States to Employ AFDC Mothers as Paid Day Care Providers, and to Test the Effect of a Larger Exclusion of Automobiles From Resources.—Section 1115(b) of such Act (as added by section 9102(b) of this Act) is amended by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (6), and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraphs:

"(4)(A) In order to encourage States to employ or arrange for the employment of parents (of dependent children receiving aid under State plans approved under section 402(a)) as providers of day care for other children receiving such aid, including any training which may be necessary to prepare the parents for such employment, up to 5 States may undertake and carry out demonstration projects designed to test whether such employment will effectively facilitate the conduct of the education, training, and work program under section 416 by making additional day care services available to meet the requirements of section 402(g)(1) while affording significant numbers of families receiving such aid a realistic opportunity to avoid welfare dependence.

"(B) The Secretary shall consider all applications received from States desiring to conduct demonstration projects under this paragraph, shall approve up to 5 applications involving projects which appear likely to contribute significantly to the achievement of the purpose of this paragraph, and shall make grants to those States whose applications are approved to assist them in carrying out such projects. Each project under this paragraph shall meet such conditions and requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe.

"(5)(A) In order to test the effect of increasing the maximum excludable value of automobiles under State plans approved under section 402, up to 5 States may undertake and carry out demonstration projects under which the resources of any individual are determined as though the amount prescribed by the Secretary under section 402(a)(7)(B) with respect to such individual's excludable ownership interest in an automobile were the same as the amount that would be excluded or disregarded in similar circumstances under the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (and such section 402(a)(7)(B) shall be deemed to have been modified accordingly for purposes of any such project). Demonstration projects under this paragraph shall meet such conditions and requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe, and no such project shall be conducted for a period of more than 5 years.

"(B) The Secretary shall consider all applications received from States desiring to conduct demonstration projects under this paragraph, shall approve up to 5 applications involving projects which appear likely to contribute significantly to the achievement of the purpose of this paragraph, and shall make grants to the States whose applications are approved to assist them in carrying out such projects. Both urban and rural States must be included among the States whose applications are approved.".

Each State agency administering the education, training, and work program under section 416 of the Social Security Act shall regularly assess the availability and reliability of the child care services which are available to participants in such program, and shall take such action as may be necessary or appropriate—

(1) to develop new child care resources as the need may indicate; and

(2) to ensure the coordination of child care provided under section 402(g)(1) of the Social Security Act with other child care programs, including child development programs.

The actions required under the preceding sentence shall be taken by the State agency in cooperation with the agency of the State having jurisdiction over the provision of child care services, and shall reflect and take full account of the information set forth in the reports submitted by the State under section 2006(c) of the Social Security Act (as added by section 9183 of this Act).

"(8)(A) provide (subject to subsection (g)(1)(C)) that, with respect to any month, in making the determination under paragraph (7), the State agency—

"(i) shall disregard all of the earned income of each dependent child receiving family support supplements who is (as determined by the State in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary) a full-time student or a part-time student who is not a full-time employee attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him or her for gainful employment;

"(ii) shall disregard from the earned income of any child or relative applying for or receiving family support supplements, or of any other individual (living in the same home as such relative and child) whose needs are taken into account in making such determination, the first $100 of the total of such earned income for such month;

"(iii) shall disregard from the earned income of any child or relative receiving family support supplements, or of any other individual (living in the same home as such relative and child) whose needs are taken into account in making such determination, an amount equal to 25 percent of the total of such earned income not disregarded under any other clause of this subparagraph;

"(iv) shall disregard the first $50 of any child support payments received in such month with respect to the dependent child or children in any family applying for or receiving family support supplements (including support payments collected and paid to the family under section 457(b));

"(v) may disregard the income of any dependent child or minor parent applying for or receiving family support supplements which is derived from a program carried out under the Job Training Partnership Act, but only in such amounts and for such period of time (not to exceed 6 months with respect to earned income) as the Secretary may provide in regulations;

"(vi) may disregard all or any part of the earned income of a dependent child who is a full-time student and who is applying for family support supplements, but only if the earned income of such child is excluded for such month in determining the family's total income under paragraph (18); and

"(vii) shall disregard any refund of Federal income taxes made to a family receiving family support supplements by reason of section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to earned income credit) and any payment made to such a family by an employer under section 3507 of such Act (relating to advance payment of earned income credit); and

"(B) provide that (with respect to any month) the State agency shall not disregard, under clause (ii) or (iii) of subparagraph (A), any earned income of any one of the persons specified in subparagraph (A)(ii) if such person—

"(i) terminated his or her employment or reduced his or her earned income without good cause within such period (of not less than 30 days) preceding such month as may be prescribed by the Secretary;

"(ii) refused without good cause, within such period preceding such month as may be prescribed by the Secretary, to accept employment in which he or she is able to engage which is offered through the public employment offices of the State, or is otherwise offered by an employer if the offer of such employer is determined by the State or local agency administering the State plan, after consulting with the employer, to be a bona fide offer of employment; or

"(iii) failed without good cause to make a timely report (as prescribed by the State plan pursuant to paragraph (14)) to the State agency of earned income received in such month;".

(b) INCREASES IN AMOUNTS TO BE DISREGARDED.—(1) Section 402 of such Act (as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Any State may at its option increase the dollar amount under clause (ii) or (iv) of subsection (a)(8)(A) or the percentage figure under clause (iii) of such subsection (or increase both of such dollar amounts, or either or both of such dollar amounts as well as such percentage figure), effective on the first day of any calendar quarter beginning on or after the effective date of this subsection, so long as such increase (or the combination of such increases) does not have the effect of permitting a family to be eligible for aid under the State plan for any month in violation of subsection (a)(18).

"(2) Whenever benefit amounts under title II are increased by any percentage effective with any month as a result of a determination made under section 215(i), the dollar amount under subsection (a)(8)(A)(ii), as specified therein or as previously increased under paragraph (1) of this subsection or this paragraph, shall be increased by the same percentage (and rounded, when not a multiple of $1, to the next lower such multiple), effective on the first day of the following month; but no increase under this paragraph shall be effective to the extent that it would permit a family to be eligible for aid under the State plan for any month in violation of subsection (a)(18).".

(2) Section 457(b)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting after "monthly support payments" the following: "(or such larger portion of the amounts so collected as the State may have established, for purposes of section 402(a)(8)(A)(iv), under section 402(h)(1))".

"(i) the family ceases to include a child who is (or would if need be) a dependent child, or

"(ii) any member of the family terminates his or her employment or reduces his or her earned income without good cause or refuses without good cause to accept employment, or fails to cooperate with the State in establishing paternity or obtaining support or other payments as required by paragraph (26)(B), such period shall automatically end (as of the close of the last month in which the family included such a child or at the close of the month in which such termination, refusal, or failure occurred), and (C) such 6-month period shall include, and not be in addition to, any period during which the family remains eligible for assistance under such title XIX (after becoming ineligible for family support supplements) under section 406(h) or 1902(e);".

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR FAMILIES HEADED BY MINOR PARENTS

"SEC. 417. (a)(1) The State agency shall assign an individual case manager to each family, receiving family support supplements under the State's plan approved under section 402, which is headed by a minor parent. The case manager so assigned shall be responsible for assuring that the family receives and effectively uses all of the aid and services which are available to it under the plan and under related laws and programs, and for supervising and monitoring the provision and use of such aid and services. Each case manager assigned under this subsection shall maintain a caseload sufficiently small to assure the provision of intensive services to and close supervision of the families to which he or she is assigned.

"(2) If the family is participating in the program under section 416, only one case manager shall be assigned to perform all case management functions for the family.

"(b)(1)(A) Each family headed by an unmarried minor parent shall be required to live with a parent, legal guardian, or other adult relative of such minor parent or in a foster home, maternity home, or other supportive living arrangement, except to the extent that the State agency determines that it is impossible or inappropriate to do so (as more particularly described in subparagraph (B)). The case manager assigned to the family may in any event require that payments of family support supplements with respect to the family be made when appropriate to a third party in the manner described in section 406(b)(2) (which in such a case shall be without regard to clauses (A) through (D) thereof); and if the minor parent is not living under adult supervision, and an appropriate relative or other representative payee cannot be found, the case manager may serve as representative payee.

"(B) The State agency may determine that it is impossible or inappropriate for a minor parent to live with a parent or legal guardian if—

"(i) the minor parent has no living parent or legal guardian whose whereabouts are known;

"(ii) the health or safety of the minor parent or the child would be jeopardized if they lived with the parent or guardian, or the living conditions of the parent or guardian are overcrowded;

"(iii) the parent or guardian refuses to allow the minor parent and child to live in his or her home; or

"(iv) the minor parent has lived apart from the parent or guardian for at least a year prior to the birth of the child or prior to making application for supplements under the plan.

"(2) In any case where the parent with whom the minor parent is living is also eligible for family support supplements (by reason of the presence in the household of one or more other children of such parent), the State must provide (notwithstanding paragraph (38)) that the minor parent and the minor parent's child or children constitute a family unit separate from that of the minor parent's parent and such other children.

"(c) The State may at its option (1) require school attendance by the minor parent on a part-time basis as a condition of such parent's eligibility for aid under the State plan, or (2) require that the minor parent participate in training in parenting and family living skills, including nutrition and health education, as a condition of such eligibility (without regard to the age of the child or children); but in either case only if and to the extent that day care for the child or children is guaranteed (and is guaranteed within the applicable dollar limitations set forth in section 402(g) if the child or any of the children is below 3 years of age).

"(d) Amounts expended by a State under this section in providing case management services with respect to families headed by minor parents shall be considered, for purposes of section 403(a)(3)(D), to be expenditures for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan.

"(e) For purposes of this section, the term 'minor parent' means a parent who has not yet attained the age of 18.".

Section 402 of the Social Security Act (as amended by the preceding provisions of this subtitle) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) Each State shall annually re-evaluate its need standard and its payment standard under the family support program, giving particular attention to whether or not the amount which it has assumed to be necessary for shelter, in setting such standards, is adequate in the light of current housing costs in the State and in different regions within the State. The result of each such re-evaluation shall be reported by the State to the Secretary, to the Congress, and to the public.".

SEC. 9172. ENCOURAGEMENT OF STATES TO INCREASE FSP BENEFIT LEVELS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Section 403 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k)(1)(A) In the case of any State which, effective on or after October 1, 1988, increases the level of the family support supplements which are payable under its approved State plan, the percentage of the total amount expended during any quarter as family support supplements under such plan which would otherwise be payable to the State (without regard to this subsection) as the Federal share of such expenditures under subsection (a) (1) or (2) (with or without the application of section 1118), to the extent that the total amount so expended is attributable to such increase, shall be equal to the percentage of the Federal share of the expenses attributable to such increase, as it would be determined by the application of subsection (a) (1) or (2) without regard to this subsection, increased by 25 percent (but not to more than 90 percent).

"(B) If the increase involved becomes effective on the first day of a quarter, subparagraph (A) shall apply with respect to expenditures made on and after such first day. If the increase becomes effective at any other time during a quarter, subparagraph (A) shall apply only with respect to expenditures made on and after the first day of the following quarter.

"(C) The resulting net Federal share of the total amounts expended during such quarter as family support supplements under the State plan (including both the expenditures to which this paragraph applies and the expenditures to which it does not) shall be determined as provided in paragraph (2).

"(2)(A) Whenever a State (effective on or after October 1, 1988) increases the level of the family support supplements which are payable under its approved State plan, the Secretary shall determine with respect to each particular size of family separately specified under the plan (assuming for this purpose that no family has any other income)—

"(i) the level of such supplements (expressed as a monthly dollar amount) as of September 30, 1988;

"(ii) the level of such supplements (expressed as a monthly dollar amount) immediately after such increase becomes effective;

"(iii) the dollar amount of the increase (if any) in such level; and

"(iv) the percentage of the State's total FSP caseload (i.e., of the total number of families receiving family support supplements under the plan) which is represented by families of that particular size.

"(B) The Federal share of the expenditures which are made as family support supplements under the State plan with respect to families of any particular size during any quarter commencing with the later of the quarter beginning October 1, 1988, or the first quarter in which the increase is effective, and which (if any) are attributable to such increase, shall be a percentage equal to—

"(i) the sum of (I) the level determined under subparagraph (A)(i) for such families multiplied by the net Federal percentage determined under subsection (a) (1) or (2) or section 1118 without regard to this subsection, and (II) the amount of the increase (if any) determined under subparagraph (A)(iii) for such families multiplied by the percentage of the Federal share of the expenditures attributable to such increase as determined under paragraph (1)(A), divided by—

"(ii) the level determined under subparagraph (A)(ii), with the resulting quotient multiplied by—

"(iii) the percentage of the State's total FSP caseload which is represented by families of that particular size as determined under subparagraph (A)(iv).

"(C) The net Federal share of the total amounts expended during the quarter involved as family support supplements under the State's approved plan for purposes of subsection (a) (1) or (2) shall be a percentage equal to the sum of the percentages determined for all family sizes by the application of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (B) to families of each such size separately; and the percentage of such net Federal share as so determined shall be in lieu of the percentage which would otherwise be applied under subsection (a) (1) or (2) or under section 1118.".

(2)(A) Section 403(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "an amount equal to" in paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting in lieu thereof in each instance "an amount (subject to subsection (k)) equal to".

(B) The first sentence of section 1118 of such Act is amended by inserting "(subject to section 403(k))" after "be determined".

(3) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall monitor and study the implementation of the amendments made by this subsection and the effect of such amendments on benefit levels and related aspects of the program under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and shall submit to the Congress on or before October 1, 1991, and again on or before October 1, 1993, a detailed report on such implementation and effect.

(b) Prohibition Against Benefit Reductions.—Section 402(a) of such Act (as amended by sections 9161(a) and 9162(b) of this Act) is further amended by inserting after paragraph (38) the following new paragraph:

"(39) provide that the State will not reduce the level of the aid payable under the State plan to families of any size or composition below the level in effect for such families on June 10, 1987 (or below a level scheduled to become effective for such families after that date (and on or before September 30, 1988) under a State law enacted on or before June 10, 1987); and".

SEC. 9173. STUDY OF NEW NATIONAL APPROACHES TO WELFARE BENEFITS FOR LOW-INCOME FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN.

(a) In General.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into a contract or arrangement with the National Academy of Sciences for the study of a new national system of welfare benefits for low-income families with children, giving particular attention to what an appropriate national minimum benefit might be and how it should be calculated. The study shall give consideration to alternative minimum benefit proposals including proposals for benefits based on a family living standard, on weighted national median income, on State median income, and on the poverty level, and shall take into account the probable impact of a national minimum benefit on individuals and on State and local governments.

(b) Methodology.—(1) The study under this section shall include the development of a uniform national methodology which could be used to calculate State-specific family living standards and benefits based on other minimum benefit proposals.

(2) The methodology so developed shall be designed to identify a single uniform measure suitable for application in each State, and shall—

(A) take into account actual living costs in each State while permitting variances in such costs as between the different geographic areas of the State;

(B) take into account variations in actual living costs in each State for families of different sizes and composition; and

(C) specify an effective process for reassessing and updating both the methodology and the resulting family living standards and benefits based on other minimum benefit policies at least once every four years.

(3) The methodology so developed shall reflect the costs of basic necessities including housing, furnishings, food, clothing, transportation, utilities, and other maintenance items; and the study shall take into account variations in costs for different geographic areas of the State where such costs may be substantially different, and variations in costs for families of different sizes and composition.

(c) Other Considerations; Progression to Proposed Minimum Benefit Levels.—In order to assess the implications of States moving to a new system of welfare benefits, the study shall include an analysis of the relationship between a State's fiscal capacity and other circumstances and constraints and the application of a full family living standard or other minimum benefit policy. The study shall propose a formula designed to achieve a uniform progression from the level of assistance currently being provided for low-income families with children under the family support program, the food stamp program, and the low-income energy assistance program, by each State, to a level based on the full family living standard or other minimum benefit policy for that State. For this purpose the Secretary shall define the term "low-income families with children" in a manner which reflects all families that include dependent children as defined for purposes of the family support program.

(d) Report and Recommendations.—The Academy shall report its recommendations resulting from the study under this section to the Secretary no later than 24 months after the date of the enactment of this Act; and the Secretary shall promptly transmit such recommendations to the Congress.

(e) Authorization of Funds.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

(2) to identify the policies and definitions being implemented or used under each such program which are inconsistent or in conflict with those being implemented or used under the other; and

(3) to make recommendations for developing common policies and definitions for use under both programs and thereby eliminating such inconsistency or conflict to the maximum extent possible.

(c) Report.—The commission shall submit to the President and the Congress within one year after the date of the enactment of this Act a full and complete report on its study under this section, including its recommendations for such legislative, administrative, and other actions as may be considered appropriate.

"(e) In order to assist in obtaining the information needed to carry out subsection (b)(1) and otherwise to perform his duties under this part, the Secretary shall establish uniform reporting requirements under which each State will be required periodically to furnish such information and data as the Secretary may determine to be necessary to ensure that sections 402(a)(37), 402(g), and 417 are being effectively implemented, including at a minimum the average monthly number of families assisted under each such section, the types of such families, the amounts expended with respect to such families, and the length of time for which such families are assisted. The information and data so furnished with respect to families assisted under section 402(g) shall be separately stated with respect to families who have earnings and those who do not, and with respect to families who are receiving aid under the State plan and those who are not.".

SEC. 9183. STATE REPORTS ON EXPENDITURE AND USE OF SOCIAL SERVICES FUNDS.

Section 2006 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out that part of the second sentence of subsection (a) which precedes "as the State finds necessary" and inserting in lieu thereof "Reports shall be prepared annually, covering the most recently completed fiscal year, and shall be in such form and contain such information (including but not limited to the information specified in subsection (c))";

(2) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d); and

(3) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) Each report prepared and transmitted by a State under subsection (a) shall set forth (with respect to the fiscal year covered by the report)—

"(1) the number of individuals who received services paid for in whole or in part with funds made available under this title, showing separately the number of children and the number of adults who received such services, and broken down in each case to reflect the types of services and circumstances involved;

"(2) the amount actually spent in providing each such type of service, showing separately for each type of service the amount spent per child recipient and the amount spent per adult recipient;

The Secretary shall establish uniform definitions of services for use by the States in preparing the information required by this subsection.".

SEC. 9184. EVALUATION OF EMPLOYMENT, TRAINING, AND WORK PROGRAMS AND RELATED PROGRAMS.

(a) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—It is the view of the Congress that there is now a broad national consensus on the importance of work and preparation for work as a means of avoiding the dependency often associated with poverty. In recent years, the States have undertaken impressive new job search, education, training, and employment programs designed to help welfare recipients achieve financial independence. Evaluations of these programs provide some reason to think they may be successful in moving welfare recipients into the workforce. In enacting this subtitle the Congress is attempting to help the States pursue these programs by providing generous new resources and a great deal of flexibility in designing and implementing the programs. In addition, the Congress is granting the States great latitude in using funds currently addressed to meeting the needs of low-income citizens and citizens living in poverty. But the Congress also intends to learn as much as possible from this new investment of public funds and this new enrichment of Federal-State relations. In recent years the Congress has profited from the knowledge produced by large-scale evaluations; it is the intent of the Congress to pursue the strategy of careful evaluation of social programs in order to improve and perfect the legislation upon which these programs are based. It is the purpose of this section to carry out this objective.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERAGENCY PANEL.—Within 3 months after the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall convene an Interagency Panel consisting of representatives from the Office of Management and Budget, the Congressional Budget Office, the Congressional Research Service, and the General Accounting Office. The Panel shall meet periodically to design, implement, and monitor a series of implementation and evaluation studies to assess the methods and effects of the programs initiated under this subtitle. Insofar as possible, the Panel shall work in a collegial fashion; but if consensus cannot be reached among Panel members on particular decisions the Secretary of Health and Human Services is authorized to make all final decisions about program design, use of contractors, conduct of particular studies, and any other matters which may come before the Panel.

(c) ADVISORY BOARD.—Within 6 months after the enactment of this Act, the Interagency Panel shall select and appoint an advisory board of not more than 12 members. The advisory board shall include representatives of business, labor, academia, children's groups, State government, local government, welfare rights organizations, religious organizations, and community self-help organizations. The advisory board shall meet at least twice during the first year following its formation and at least once a year thereafter. (d) OPERATION OF INTERAGENCY PANEL.—(1) The Interagency Panel shall identify the significant questions to be pursued in its studies, and shall also adopt an overall design that maximizes the knowledge gained from contrasts and comparisons between the individual studies. The Panel shall make special efforts to coordinate with the States and to use control groups and other methods of scientific evaluation whenever possible.

(2) The Panel may request the Secretary of Health and Human Services to supply any information, in the possession of or available to the Secretary, which may be of assistance in carrying out the Panel's functions under this section, and may request the Secretary to obtain any such information from States by requiring its inclusion in any of the State reports provided for under this subtitle or otherwise provided for by law. SEC. 9185. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM OF GRANTS TO PROVIDE PERMANENT HOUSING FOR FAMILIES THAT WOULD OTHERWISE REQUIRE EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Section 1115 of the Social Security Act (as amended by the preceding provisions of this subtitle) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) In order to ensure that States which incur particularly high costs in providing emergency assistance for temporary housing to homeless FSP families may have an adequate opportunity to test whether such costs could be effectively reduced by the construction or rehabilitation (with the assistance of Federal grants) of permanent housing that such families can afford with their regular family support supplements, there is hereby established a demonstration program under which the Secretary shall make grants to those States, selected in accordance with paragraph (2), which conduct demonstration projects in accordance with this subsection.

"(2)(A) Any State which desires to participate in the demonstration program established by paragraph (1) may submit an application therefor to the Secretary.

"(B) To be eligible for selection to conduct a demonstration project under such program, a State—

"(i) must be currently providing emergency assistance (as defined in paragraph (6)(A)) in the form of housing, including transitional housing;

"(ii) must have a particularly acute need for assistance in dealing with the problems of homeless FSP families by virtue of the large number of such families, and the existence of shortages in the supply of low-income housing, in the political subdivision or subdivisions where such project would be conducted; and

"(iii) must submit a plan to achieve significant cost savings over a 10-year period through the conduct of such project with assistance under this subsection.

"(C) The Secretary shall select up to 3 States, from among those which submit applications under subparagraph (A) and are determined to be eligible under subparagraph (B), to conduct demonstration projects in accordance with this subsection. In the event that more than 3 States are determined to be eligible, the 3 States selected shall be those whose cost savings (as described in clause (iii) of subparagraph (B)) will be the greatest.

"(D) Grants for each demonstration project under this subsection shall be awarded within 6 months after the date of the appropriation of funds (pursuant to paragraph (8)) for the purposes prescribed in this subsection.

"(3) For each year during which a State is conducting a demonstration project under this subsection, the Secretary shall make a grant to such State, in an amount determined under paragraph (8)(B)), for the construction or rehabilitation of permanent housing to serve individuals and families who would otherwise require emergency assistance in the form of temporary housing.

"(4) A grant may be made to a State under paragraph (2) only if such State (along with or as a part of its application) furnishes the Secretary with satisfactory assurances that—

"(A) the proceeds of the grant will be used exclusively for the construction or rehabilitation of permanent housing to be owned by the State, a political subdivision of the State, an agency or instrumentality of the State or of a political subdivision of the State, or a nonprofit organization;

"(B) all units assisted with funds from the proceeds of the grant will be used exclusively for rental to families which—

"(i) are eligible, at the time of the rental, for aid under the State's plan approved under section 402 (and a family with one or more members who meet this requirement shall not be deemed ineligible because one or more other members receive benefits under title XVI),

"(ii) have been unable to obtain decent housing at rents that can be paid with the portion of such aid allocated for shelter, and

"(iii) if such housing were not available to them, would be compelled to live in a shelter for the homeless or in a hotel or motel, or other temporary accommodations, paid for with emergency assistance, or would be homeless;

"(C) the local jurisdiction in which such housing will be located is experiencing a critical shortage of housing units that are available to families eligible for aid under the State plan at rents that can be paid with the portion of such aid allocated for shelter; and

"(D) whenever units assisted with grants under the project become available for occupancy, the State will discontinue the use of an equivalent number of units of the most costly accommodations it has been using as temporary housing paid for with emergency assistance, except to the extent that such accommodations are demonstrably needed—

"(i) in addition to the units so assisted, to take account of increases in the caseload under the emergency assistance program, or

"(ii) because, due to the condition or location of such accommodations, or other factors, discontinuing the use of such units would not be in the best interests of needy families, provided that the State discontinues the use of an equivalent number of other units it has been using as temporary housing paid for with emergency assistance; and only if the State, along with or as a part of its application, includes such documentary and other materials as may be necessary to establish its eligibility under paragraph (2)(B) and such provisions as may be necessary to carry out the requirements of subparagraph (D) of this paragraph.

"(5)(A) The average cost to the Federal Government per unit of housing constructed or rehabilitated with a grant under a project under this subsection shall be an amount no greater than the calculated yearly payment of emergency assistance that would be required to provide housing for a family in a shelter for the homeless, a hotel or motel, or other temporary quarters for one year, in the jurisdiction or jurisdictions where the project is located.

"(B) The total of Federal payments to a State under part A of title IV over the 10-year period beginning at the time construction or rehabilitation commences under the State's project under this subsection, with respect to the families who will live in housing assisted by a grant under such project (the 'total grant cost' as more particularly defined in paragraph (6)(C)), must be lower as a result of the construction or rehabilitation of permanent housing with the grant than it would be if the State made emergency assistance payments with respect to the families involved at the level of the standard yearly payment (as defined in paragraph (6)(B)) during such 10-year period.

"(C) Any grant to a State under paragraph (1) shall be made only on condition (i) that such State pay a percentage of the total cost of the construction or rehabilitation of the housing involved equal at least to the percentage of the current non-Federal share of family support supplements under the State's plan approved under section 402 (as determined under section 403(a) or 1118), increased by 10 percentage points, and (ii) that such State not require any of its political subdivisions to pay a higher percentage of the total costs of the construction or rehabilitation of such housing than it would pay with respect to family support supplements pursuant to such State plan.

"(6) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'emergency assistance' means emergency assistance to needy families with children as described in section 403(e), and regular payments for the costs of temporary housing authorized as a special needs item under the State plan;

"(B) the term 'standard yearly payment', with respect to emergency assistance used to provide housing for a family in a shelter for the homeless, a hotel or motel, or other temporary quarters during any year in any jurisdiction, means an amount equal to the total amount of such assistance which was needed to provide all housing in temporary accommodations in that jurisdiction (with emergency assistance), in the most recently completed calendar year, at the 75th percentile in the range of all payments of emergency assistance for temporary accommodations, based on the State's actual experience with emergency assistance in such jurisdiction; and

"(C) the term 'total grant cost', with respect to housing constructed or rehabilitated under a demonstration project under this subsection, means the sum of (i) the Federal share of payments attributable to such housing during the 10-year period beginning on the date on which its construction or rehabilitation begins (including the grant provided under this subsection), (ii) the Federal share of payments of emergency assistance for temporary housing to the families involved during such construction or rehabilitation (at a level equal to the standard yearly payment), and (iii) the Federal share of regular payments of family support supplements under the State plan to such families during the remainder of such 10-year period.

"(7) Whenever a grant is made to a State under this subsection, the assurances required of the State under subparagraphs (A) through (D) of paragraph (4) and any other requirements imposed by the Secretary as a condition of such grant shall be considered, for purposes of section 404, as requirements imposed by or in the administration of the State's plan approved under section 402.

"(8)(A) There is authorized to be appropriated for grants under this subsection the sum of $15,000,000 for each of the first 5 fiscal years beginning on or after October 1, 1987.

"(B)(i) The amount appropriated for any fiscal year pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be divided among the States conducting demonstration projects under this subsection according to their respective need for assistance of the type involved and their respective numbers of homeless FSP families, as determined by the Secretary.

"(ii) If any State to which a grant is made under this subparagraph finds that it does not require the full amount of such grant to conduct its demonstration project under this subsection in the fiscal year involved, the unused portion of such grant shall be reallocated to the other States conducting such projects in amounts based on their respective need for assistance of the type involved, as determined by the Secretary.

"(iii) Amounts appropriated pursuant to subparagraph (A), and grants made from such amounts, shall remain available until expended.

"(9) The Secretary shall prescribe and publish regulations to implement the provisions of this subsection no later than 6 months after the date of its enactment.".

(b) Effective Date.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective October 1, 1987.

SEC. 9186. CHILD SUPPORT DEMONSTRATION PROJECT IN NEW YORK STATE.

(a) In General.—Upon application by the State of New York and approval by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the State of New York (in this section referred to as the "State") may conduct a demonstration project in accordance with this section for the purpose of testing its Child Support Supplement Program as an alternative to the existing AFDC program and the Family Support Program.

(b) Nature of Project.—Under the demonstration project conducted under this section—

(1) all custodial parents of dependent children who are eligible for family support supplements under the State plan approved under section 402(a) of the Social Security Act, and/or such types or classes of such parents as the State may specify, may elect to receive benefits under the Child Support Supplement Program in lieu of family support supplements under such plan; and

(2) the Federal Government will pay to the State with respect to families receiving benefits under the Child Support Supplement Program the same amounts as would have been payable with respect to such families under section 403 (or 1118) of the Social Security Act if they were receiving family support supplements under the State plan, calculating the Federal payments without regard to any increased earnings by such families which may arise from their participation in the Program.

(c) Waivers.—The Secretary shall (with respect to the project under this section) waive compliance with any requirements contained in title IV of the Social Security Act which (if applied) would prevent the State from carrying out the project or effectively achieving its purpose.

(d) Required Assurances.—As a condition of approval of the project under this section, the State must provide assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that it will continue to make assistance available to all eligible children in the State who are in need of financial support, and will continue to operate an effective child support enforcement program.

(e) Effective Date and Duration of Project.—The Secretary shall approve or disapprove the application of the State within 90 days after the date of its submission; and if the application as initially submitted is disapproved the Secretary and the State shall negotiate the revisions necessary for its approval. The project under this section shall commence no later than the first day of the third calendar quarter beginning on or after the date of its approval and shall continue for five years.

SEC. 9187. DEMONSTRATION OF FAMILY INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM IN WASHINGTON STATE.

(a) In General.—Upon application by the State of Washington and approval by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the State of Washington (in this section referred to as the "State") may conduct a demonstration project in accordance with this section for the purpose of testing whether the operation of its Family Independence Program enacted in May 1987 (in this section referred to as the "Program"), as an alternative to the existing AFDC program and the FSP program, would more effectively break the cycle of poverty and provide families with opportunities for economic independence and strengthened family functioning.

(b) Nature of Project.—Under the demonstration project conducted under this section—

(1) every individual eligible for family support supplements under the State plan approved under section 402(a) of the Social Security Act shall be eligible to enroll in the Program, which shall operate simultaneously with the family support program so long as there are individuals who qualify for the latter;

(2) cash assistance shall be furnished in a timely manner to all eligible individuals under the Program (and the State may not make expenditures for services under the Program until it has paid all necessary cash assistance), with no family receiving less in cash benefits than it would have received under the family support program;

(3) individuals may be required to register, undergo assessment, and participate in work, education, or training under the Program, except that—

(A) work or training may not be required in the case of—

(i) a single parent of a child under 6 months of age, or more than one parent of such a child in a two-parent family,

(ii) a single parent with a child of any age who has received assistance for less than 6 months,

(iii) a single parent with a child under 3 years of age who has received assistance for less than 3 years,

(iv) an individual under 16 years of age or over 64 years of age,

(v) an individual who is incapacitated, temporarily ill, or needed at home to care for an impaired person,

(vi) a woman who is in the third trimester of pregnancy, or

(vii) an individual who has not yet been individually notified in writing of such requirement or of the expiration of his or her exempt status under this subparagraph;

(B) participation in work or training shall in any case be voluntary during the first two years of the Program, and may thereafter be made mandatory only in counties where more than 50 percent of the enrollees can be placed in employment within 3 months after they are job-ready;

(C) in no case shall the work and training aspect of the Program be mandated in any county where the unemployment level is at least twice the State average; and

(D) mandated work shall not include work in any position created by a reduction in the work force, a bona fide labor dispute, the decertification of a bargaining unit, or a new job classification which subverts the intention of the Program;

(4) there shall be no change in existing State law which would eliminate guaranteed benefits or reduce the rights of applicants or enrollees; and

(5) the Program shall include due process guarantees and procedures no less than those which are available to participants in the AFDC or FSP program under Federal law and regulation and under State law.

(c) Waivers.—The Secretary shall (with respect to the project under this section) waive compliance with any requirements contained in title IV of the Social Security Act which (if applied) would prevent the State from carrying out the project or effectively achieving its purpose.

(d) Funding.—(1) The Secretary shall reimburse the State for its expenditures under the Program—

(A) at a rate equal to the Federal matching rate applicable to the State under section 403(a)(1) (or 1118) of the Social Security Act, for cash assistance and child care provided to enrollees;

(B) at a rate equal to the applicable Federal matching rate under section 403(a)(3) of such Act, for administrative expenses; and

(C) at the rate of 75 percent for an evaluation plan approved by the Secretary.

The State shall be required to pay the same portion of all expenditures made for cash assistance and services under the Program as it would be required to pay if such expenditures were made under its State plan approved under section 402(a) of the Social Security Act.

(2) As a condition of approval of the project under this section, the State must provide assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the total amount of Federal reimbursement over the period of the project will not exceed the anticipated Federal reimbursements (over that period) under the current family support program; but this paragraph shall not prevent the State from claiming reimbursement for additional persons who would qualify for aid under the family support program, for costs attributable to increases in the State's payment standard, or for any other federally-matched benefits or services.

(e) Duration of Project.—(1) The project under this section shall begin on the date on which the first individual is enrolled in the Program, and (subject to paragraph (2)) shall end 5 years after that date.

(2) The project may be terminated at any time, on 6 months written notice, by the State or (upon a finding that the State has materially failed to comply with this section) by the Secretary.

Each project approved under this section shall meet such conditions and requirements, consistent with this section, as the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall prescribe.

(b) APPLICATION AND APPROVAL OF PROJECTS.—(1) The Secretary shall consider all applications received from States desiring to conduct SSI Outreach Team Projects under this section, and shall approve up to 10 applications involving projects which appear likely to contribute significantly to the achievement of the purpose of this section.

The cost of each such project shall not exceed $250,000 a year, except that the Secretary may in any particular case permit the State to incur costs in excess of such amount (and increase the amount of the grant accordingly), to the extent that appropriated funds are available therefor, if the State satisfactorily demonstrates that higher costs must be incurred in order to properly serve the homeless within the project area.

(A) a case worker from the State adult social services agency or from a local adult social services agency within the State, who shall be the team leader, and (if necessary for the effective performance of the team's functions) one additional case worker from such an agency;

(C) assist such individuals in applying for any benefits for which they may be eligible and in obtaining and providing the information and supporting documents which may be necessary for that purpose; and

(D) take any and all other actions which may be necessary or appropriate to ensure that all homeless individuals receive the benefits to which they are entitled.

(2) Each team shall perform its functions at shelters where potential SSI recipients may be found, except with respect to particular functions and in particular cases where the exercise of such functions at other locations is required. To the maximum extent possible, all of the decisions, determinations, and other administrative actions necessary to provide homeless individuals with the benefits to which they are entitled shall be made or taken at the shelters, without requiring such individuals to travel to the governmental agency or entity involved; and the members of the team shall have full authority to make such decisions and determinations and take such administrative actions, at the shelters, in accordance with the authority granted to them by their respective agencies as described in subsection (d)(2).

(3) The team leader (and the additional case worker referred to in subsection (d)(1)(A) if there is one) shall have the specific responsibility of—

(A) determining, prior to the visit of the team to a shelter, the names of the individuals in the shelter who are potentially eligible individuals for SSI purposes, and determining whether they are receiving or have received SSI benefits or other benefits administered by the Social Security Administration (utilizing the claims representative on the team for this purpose);

(g) INFORMATION AND REPORTS; EVALUATION.—(1) Each State having an approved SSI Outreach Team Project shall periodically submit to the Secretary such information (with respect to the project) as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to evaluate such project in particular and the demonstration program under this section in general.

(2)(A) The Secretary shall from time to time (but not less often than annually) submit to the Congress a full and complete report on the program under this section, together with a detailed evaluation of such program and of the projects thereunder along with such recommendations as may be deemed appropriate. Such evaluation and such recommendations shall be designed to serve as a basis for determining whether (and to what extent) the activities and procedures included in the demonstration program under this section should be continued, expanded, or modified, or converted (with or without changes) into a regular feature of permanent law.

(B) The criteria used by the Secretary in evaluating the program and the projects thereunder shall not be limited to those which would normally be used in evaluating programs and activities of the kind involved, but shall fully take into account the special circumstances of the homeless and their need for personalized attention and follow-through assistance, and shall emphasize the extent to which the procedures and assistance made available to applicants under such projects are recognizing those circumstances and meeting that need.

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary—

(A) the sum of $1,250,000 for the fiscal year 1988;

(B) the sum of $2,500,000 for the fiscal year 1989; and

(b) LIMITATION ON EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE.—Nothing in title IV of the Social Security Act shall prevent a State, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall take no action (by regulation or otherwise) to prevent a State, prior to October 1, 1988, from furnishing emergency assistance without durational limitation under section 406(e) of such Act to families otherwise qualified therefor (with Federal financial participation under section 403(a)(5)), during any period of 12 consecutive months, if such assistance is authorized by the State during a single period of 30 consecutive days in such 12-month period (including assistance in the form of payments to meet needs which arose before such 30-day period or needs such as rent which extend beyond such 30-day period).

(c) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—(1) For the purpose of encouraging landlords to make permanent dwelling units available to needy families that otherwise require emergency assistance under section 406(e) of the Social Security Act in the form of commercial or similar transient accommodations, and of testing a potentially effective method of minimizing or eliminating the need for emergency assistance in the form of commercial or similar transient accommodations, any State which provides for temporary shelter as a special need may submit to the Secretary of Health and Human Services an application to establish and conduct a demonstration project in accordance with this subsection and with such related conditions and requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe. The Secretary is authorized to approve any such application if it appears likely that the proposed project will contribute significantly to the achievement of the purpose specified in the preceding sentence.

(2) A demonstration project under this subsection must—

(C) require that the landlord of the unit guarantee the continuation or renewal of the lease for at least 24 months beyond the 12-month period referred to in subparagraph (B)(i); and

(D) include such provisions as may be necessary to ensure that each of the dwellings and dwelling units involved meets all local housing codes, and that in each case the landlord has a record which is free from any evidence of tenant harassment, and from evidence that tenants have been forced out of units in the dwelling (or that units in the dwelling have been reserved) in order to make such units available for the project.

No lease shall be entered into under a project under this subsection after September 30, 1989.

(3) Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in part A of title IV of the Social Security Act or in regulations thereunder, the full amount of the rent payable for any dwelling unit occupied by a family under the project under this subsection for the first 12 month of the lease (as determined under paragraph (2)(B)(i)) shall constitute an expenditure subject to Federal reimbursement under section 403(a) of such Act and shall constitute the family's proper housing allowance for purposes of part A of title IV of such Act.

(4) As used in this subsection, the term "commercial or similar transient accommodations" means transient accommodations in (A) a commercial hotel, or (B) a similar establishment not directly operated or contracted for by the State or a political subdivision, or by a not-for-profit organization authorized by the State or political subdivision to provide such accommodations.

To carry out such program, the Secretary shall enter into agreements with three States that—

(D) the range and extent of specialized services to be provided by the State to individuals covered by such an agreement;

(E) the design of the evaluation to be applied by the State to the program; and

(F) the standards which are to be utilized by the State for the purpose of assuring that individuals who will receive self-employment assistance under this section will have sufficient experience (or training) and ability to be self employed.

(2) The Secretary may not enter into an agreement with any State under this section unless the Secretary makes a determination that the State's unemployment compensation program has adequate reserves.

(c) PROVISIONS OF AGREEMENTS.—Any agreement entered into with a State under this section shall provide that—

(1) each individual who is an eligible individual with respect to any benefit year beginning during the three-year period commencing on the date on which such agreement is entered into shall receive a self-employment allowance;

(2) self-employment allowances made to any individual under this section shall be made in the same amount, on the same terms, and subject to the same conditions as regular or extended unemployment compensation, as the case may be, paid by such State; except that—

(A) State and Federal requirements relating to availability for work, active search for work, or refusal to accept suitable work shall not apply to such individual; and

(B) such individual shall be considered to be unemployed for purposes of the State and Federal laws applicable to unemployment compensation,

(d) EVALUATION.—(1) Each State that enters into an agreement under this section shall carry out an evaluation of its activities under this section. Such evaluation shall be based on an experimental design with random assignment between a treatment group and a control group with not more than one-half of the individuals receiving assistance at any one time being assigned to the treatment group.

(2) The Secretary shall use the data provided from such evaluation to analyze the benefits and the costs of the program carried out under this section, to formulate the reports under subsection (g), and to estimate any excess costs described in subsection (c)(6)(A).

(2) In any case in which a self-employment allowance is made under this section to an individual in lieu of extended unemployment compensation under the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970, payments made under this section for self-employment allowances shall be considered to be compensation described in section 204(a)(1) of such Act and paid under State law.

(A) ineligible for further assistance under this section; and

(B) subject to prosecution under section 1001 of title 18, United States Code.

(i) the providing of such assistance or making of such payment was without fault on the part of such person; and

(ii) such repayment would be contrary to equity and good conscience.

(B) No repayment shall be required under subparagraph (A) until a determination has been made, notice thereof and an opportunity for a fair hearing has been given to the person, and the determination has become final. Any determination under such subparagraph shall be subject to review in the same manner and to the same extent as determinations under the State unemployment compensation law, and only in that manner and to that extent.

the hospital shall be considered to be located in that adjacent urban area. Such term does not include any institution which is primarily for the care and treatment of mental diseases. Such term also includes any institution described in paragraph (1) of subsection (y), to the extent and subject to the limitations provided in such subsection. Such term also includes any institution which is located in a State on an Indian reservation and is certified by the Secretary as meeting the requirements of this subsection and subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 1819.".

(b) Specification of Requirements.—Part A of title XVIII of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"REQUIREMENTS FOR, AND ASSURING QUALITY OF CARE IN, SKILLED NURSING FACILITIES

"Sec. 1819. (a) Requirements Relating to Provision of Services.—For purposes of section 1861(j)(3), the requirements of this subsection (relating to provision of services) for a skilled nursing facility are as follows:

"(1) Quality of life.—A skilled nursing facility must care for its residents in such a manner and in such an environment as will promote maintenance or enhancement of the quality of life of each resident.

"(2) Scope of services under plan of care.—A skilled nursing facility must provide services that will attain or maintain the highest possible mental and psychosocial well-being, as well as physical well-being, of each resident, in accordance with a written plan of care which—

"(A) describes the medical, nursing, and psychosocial needs of the resident and how such needs will be met; and

"(B) is initially prepared by a team which includes the attending physician and a professional registered nurse with responsibility for the resident, and is periodically reviewed and revised by such team after each assessment under paragraph (3).

"(3) Residents' assessment.—

"(A) Requirement.—A skilled nursing facility must designate appropriate qualified staff to conduct a comprehensive accurate assessment of each resident's capacity to perform daily life functions, which assessment documents significant impairments in functional capacity and is based on a uniform minimum data set specified by the Secretary under subsection (d)(6).

"(B) Certification.—

"(i) In general.—Each such assessment must be conducted or coordinated (with the appropriate participation of health professionals) by a registered professional nurse who signs and certifies the completion of the assessment. Each individual who completes a portion of such an assessment shall sign and certify as to the accuracy of that portion of the assessment.

"(ii) Penalty for falsification.—If a facility willfully and knowingly causes an individual to certify a material and false statement in a resident assessment under this paragraph, the facility is subject to a civil money penalty of not more than $1,000 with respect to each assessment and not more than $10,000 with respect to any facility. The Secretary shall provide for imposition of civil money penalties under this clause in a manner similar to that for the imposition of civil money penalties under section 1128A.

"(iii) Use of independent assessors.—If a State determines, under a survey under subsection (e) or otherwise, that there has been a knowing and willful certification of false assessments under this paragraph, the facility must provide for such assessments to be conducted and certified by individuals who are independent of the facility.

"(C) Frequency.—Such an assessment must be conducted—

"(i) upon admission for each individual admitted on or after October 1, 1990;

"(ii) promptly after a significant change in the resident's physical or mental condition; and

"(iii) in no case less often than once every 12 months; and must be reviewed at least every 3 months. Such an assessment must be conducted, by not later than October 1, 1990, for each resident of the facility on that date.

"(D) Use.—The results of such an assessment shall be recorded and maintained in a standard form in the clinical records of the resident and shall form the basis of the planning, delivering, and revising of the resident's plan of care.

"(E) Coordination.—Such assessments shall be coordinated with any State-required preadmission screening program to the maximum extent practicable in order to avoid duplicative testing and effort.

"(4) Provision of services and activities.—

"(A) In general.—To the extent needed to fulfill all plans of care described in paragraph (2), a skilled nursing facility must provide, directly or under arrangements (or, with respect to dental services, under agreements) with others for the provision of—

"(i) sufficient nursing services, physicians' services, and specialized rehabilitative services to attain or maintain the highest possible physical, mental, and psychosocial well-being of each resident;

"(ii) medically-related social services to attain or maintain the highest possible physical, mental, and psychosocial well-being of each resident;

"(iii) pharmaceutical services that assure the accurate acquiring, receiving, dispensing, and administering all drugs and biologicals to meet the needs of the residents;

"(iv) dietician services that assure that the meals meet the daily nutritional and special dietary needs of each resident;

"(v) an on-going program of activities designed to meet the interests and the physical, mental health, and psychosocial needs of each resident; and

"(vi) routine and emergency dental services to meet the needs of each resident.

The services provided or arranged by the facility must be of adequate quality. Nothing in clause (vi) shall be construed as requiring a facility to provide or arrange for dental services described in that clause without additional charge.

"(B) Qualified persons providing services.—Services described in clauses (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), and (vi) of subparagraph (A) must be provided by qualified persons in accordance with each resident's written plan of care.

"(C) Required nursing care.—

"(i) In general.—Except as provided in clause (ii), a skilled nursing facility must provide 24-hour nursing service which is sufficient to meet nursing needs of its residents and must employ the services of a registered professional nurse at least during the day tour of duty (of at least 8 hours a day) 7 days a week.

"(ii) Exception.—To the extent that clause (i) may be deemed to require that a skilled nursing facility engage the services of a registered professional nurse for more than 40 hours a week, the Secretary is authorized to waive such requirement if the Secretary finds that—

"(I) the facility is located in a rural area and the supply of skilled nursing facility services in such area is not sufficient to meet the needs of individuals residing therein,

"(II) the facility has one full-time registered professional nurse who is regularly on duty at such facility 40 hours a week, and

"(III) the facility either has only patients whose physicians have indicated (through physicians' orders or admission notes) that each such patient does not require the services of a registered nurse or a physician for a 48-hour period, or has made arrangements for a registered professional nurse or a physician to spend such time at such facility as may be indicated as necessary by the physician to provide necessary skilled nursing services on days when the regular full-time registered professional nurse is not on duty.

A waiver under this subparagraph shall be subject to annual renewal.

"(5) Required training of nurse aides.—

"(A) Offering training and testing program.—

"(i) Training and testing programs.—A skilled nursing facility must provide (by itself or through others) training under a training and testing program that is approved by the State under section 1864(d)(1) for individuals that are used by the facility as nurse aides, other than for individuals whom the facility certifies have completed successfully such a program or a testing program approved under such section.

"(ii) Offering testing programs for employees used before July 1, 1989.—A skilled nursing facility must provide, for individuals used as a nurse aide by the facility before July 1, 1989, for a testing program approved by the State under section 1864(d)(1), and such preparation as may be necessary to complete successfully such a program, as will permit such individuals at least 2 opportunities to complete such a program by January 1, 1990.

"(B) Completion of program.—

"(i) Employees used after June 30, 1989, must complete testing program or training and testing program.—A skilled nursing facility may not use an individual, first used after June 30, 1989, as a nurse aide for more than 3 months unless the individual has successfully completed a training and testing program, or a testing program, approved by the State under section 1864(d)(1).

"(ii) Employees used before July 1, 1989, must complete testing program.—A skilled nursing facility may not use an individual, first used before July 1, 1989, as a nurse aide on or after January 1, 1990, unless the individual has successfully completed a training and testing program, or a testing program, approved by the State under section 1864(d)(1).

"(C) Competency.—The facility must not permit an individual to serve as a nurse aide or provide services of a type for which the individual has not demonstrated competency and must not use such an individual as a nurse aide unless the facility has inquired of the State registry established under subsection (d)(1)(B) as to information in the registry concerning the individual's involvement in resident neglect or abuse. If the facility uses an individual as a nurse aide and dismisses the individual from such use because of a specific finding that the individual was involved in resident neglect or abuse, the facility shall report such finding to such registry.

"(D) Retraining.—The facility requires any individual who has ceased providing direct patient care as a nurse aide for more than 24 consecutive months to complete a training and testing program, approved by the State under section 1864(d)(1), before again providing such care.

"(E) On-going training.—The facility has an ongoing program of training and performance review for nurse aides, including training for individuals providing special care to residents such as those with cognitive impairments.

"(F) Nurse aide defined.—In this paragraph, the term 'nurse aide' means any individual providing nursing or nursing-related services (whether on a full-time, temporary, per diem, or other basis) to residents in a skilled nursing facility, but does not include an individual (i) who is a physician, registered professional nurse, licensed practical nurse, or licensed or certified social worker, or (ii) who volunteers to provide such services without monetary compensation.

"(6) Physician supervision and clinical records.—A skilled nursing facility must—

"(A) require that the medical care of every resident be provided under the supervision of a physician;

"(B) provide for having a physician available to furnish necessary medical care in case of emergency; and

"(C) maintain clinical records on all residents, which records include the plans of care (described in paragraph (2)) and the residents' assessments (described in paragraph (3)).

"(b) Requirements Relating to Residents' Rights.—For purposes of section 1861(j)(3), the requirements of this subsection (relating to residents' rights) for a skilled nursing facility are as follows:

"(1) General rights.—

"(A) Specified rights.—A skilled nursing facility must protect and promote the rights of each resident, including each of the following rights:

"(i) Free choice.—The right to choose a personal attending physician, to be fully informed in advance about care and treatment, to participate, where appropriate, in planning care and treatment, and to be fully informed in advance of any changes in care or treatment that may affect the resident's well-being.

"(ii) Free from restraints.—The right to be free from physical or mental abuse, corporal punishment, involuntary seclusion, and any physical or chemical restraints imposed for purposes of discipline or convenience and not required to treat the resident's medical symptoms. Restraints may only be imposed—

"(I) to ensure the physical safety of the resident or other residents, and

"(II) only upon the written order of a physician that specifies the duration and circumstances under which the restraints are to be used, except in emergency circumstances, specified by the Secretary, until such an order could reasonably be obtained.

"(iii) Privacy.—The right to privacy with regard to accommodations, medical treatment, and written and telephonic communications.

"(iv) Confidentiality.—The right to confidentiality of personal and clinical records.

"(v) Accommodation of needs.—The rights—

"(I) to reside and receive services with reasonable accommodations of individual needs and preferences, except where the health or safety of the individual or other residents would be endangered, and

"(II) to receive a notice before the room or roommate of the resident in the facility is changed.

"(vi) Grievances.—The right to voice grievances with respect to treatment or care that is (or fails to be) furnished, without discrimination or reprisal for voicing the grievances and the right to resolution promptly by the facility of grievances the resident may have with respect to the behavior of other residents.

Clause (iii) shall not be construed as requiring the provision of a private room.

"(B) Notice of rights and services.—A skilled nursing facility must—

"(i) tell each resident of the resident's legal rights during the stay at the facility,

"(ii) provide to each resident, upon reasonable request, a written statement of such rights (which statement is updated upon changes in such rights); and

"(iii) inform each resident, in writing before or at the time of admission and periodically during the resident's stay, of rights and of services available in the facility and of related charges for such services, including any charges for services not covered under this title or under a State plan approved under title XIX, or not covered by the facility's basic per diem rate.

"(C) Rights of incompetent residents.—In the case of a resident adjudged incompetent under the laws of a State, the rights of the resident under this title shall devolve upon, and be exercised by, the person appointed under State law to act on the resident's behalf.

"(2) Transfer and discharge rights.—

"(A) In general.—A skilled nursing facility must permit each resident to remain in the facility and must not involuntarily transfer or discharge the resident from the facility unless—

"(i) the transfer or discharge is necessary to meet the resident's welfare and the resident's welfare cannot be met in the facility;

"(ii) the transfer or discharge is appropriate because the resident's health has improved sufficiently so the resident no longer needs the services provided by the facility;

"(iii) the safety of individuals in the facility is endangered;

"(iv) the health of individuals in the facility would otherwise be endangered;

"(v) the resident has failed, after reasonable and appropriate notice, to pay (or to have paid under this title on the resident's behalf) an allowable charge imposed by the facility for an item or service requested by the resident and for which a charge may be imposed consistent with section 1866(a); or

"(vi) the facility ceases to operate or participate in the program which reimburses for the resident's care.

In each of the cases described in clauses (i) through (iv), the basis for the transfer or discharge must be documented by the resident's physician in the resident's clinical record.

"(B) Pre-transfer and pre-discharge notice.—

"(i) In general.—Before effecting an involuntary transfer or discharge of a resident, a skilled nursing facility must—

"(I) notify the resident (and the guardian or an immediate relative of the resident, if known) of the transfer or discharge and the reasons therefor,

"(II) record the reasons in the resident's clinical record (including any documentation required under subparagraph (A)), and

"(III) include in the notice the items described in clause (iii).

"(ii) Timing of notice.—The notice under clause (i)(I) must be made at least 30 days in advance of the resident's transfer or discharge except—

"(I) in a case described in clause (iii) or (iv) of subparagraph (A);

"(II) in a case described in clause (ii) of subparagraph (A), where the resident's health improves sufficiently to allow a more immediate transfer or discharge; or

"(III) in a case described in clause (i) of subparagraph (A), where a more immediate transfer or discharge is necessitated by the resident's urgent medical needs.

"(iii) Items included in notice.—Each notice under clause (i) must include—

"(I) for transfers or discharges effected on or after October 1, 1989, notice of the resident's right to appeal the transfer or discharge under section 1864(d)(2); and

"(II) the name, mailing address, and telephone number of the State long-term care ombudsman (established under section 307(a)(12) of the Older Americans Act of 1965).

"(C) Orientation.—A skilled nursing facility must provide sufficient preparation and orientation to residents to ensure safe and orderly transfer or discharge from the facility.

"(3) Access and visitation rights.—A skilled nursing facility must—

"(A) permit immediate access to any resident by officially designated representatives of the Secretary, by officially designated representatives of the State, by an officially designated ombudsman described in paragraph (2)(B)(iii)(II), or by the resident's individual physician;

"(B) permit immediate access to a resident, subject to the resident's right to deny or withdraw consent at any time, by immediate family or other relatives of the resident;

"(C) permit immediate access to a resident, subject to reasonable restrictions and the resident's right to deny or withdraw consent at any time, by others who are visiting with the consent of the resident;

"(D) permit reasonable access to a resident by any entity or individual that provides health, social, legal, or other services to the resident, subject to the resident's right to deny or withdraw consent at any time; and

"(E) permit representatives of the State ombudsman (described in paragraph (2)(B)(iii)(II)), with the permission of the resident (or the resident's legal representative) and consistent with State law, to examine a resident's medical, nursing, and social records.

"(4) Equal access to quality care.—

"(A) In general.—A skilled nursing facility must establish and maintain identical policies and practices regarding transfer, discharge, and covered services for all individuals regardless of source of payment.

"(B) Admissions.—With respect to admissions practices, a skilled nursing facility must—

"(i)(I) not require individuals applying to reside or residing in the facility to waive their rights to benefits under this title or under a State plan under title XIX, (II) not require oral or written assurance that such individuals are not eligible for, or will not apply for, benefits under this title or such a State plan, and (III) prominently display in the facility and provide to such individuals written information about how to apply for and use such benefits and how to receive refunds for previous payments covered by such benefits; and

"(ii) not require a third party guarantee of payment to the facility as a condition of admission to, or continued stay in, the facility.

"(C) Construction.—

"(i) Subparagraph (B) shall not be construed as preventing States or political subdivisions therein from prohibiting, under State or local law, the discrimination against individuals who are entitled to medical assistance under such a State plan with respect to admissions practices of skilled nursing facilities.

"(ii) Subparagraph (B)(ii) shall not be construed as preventing a facility from requiring an individual, who has legal access to a resident's income or resources available to pay for care in the facility, to sign a contract (without incurring personal financial liability) to provide payment from the resident's income or resources for such care.

"(5) Protection of resident funds.—A skilled nursing facility must—

"(A) upon written authorization by a resident, accept responsibility for holding, safeguarding, and accounting for the resident's personal funds, and providing each resident access to such funds and records of such funds, and

"(B) establish and maintain a system that—

"(i) assures a full and complete accounting (not less often than quarterly) of each resident's personal funds,

"(ii) establishes a separate account or accounts for such funds in order to prevent any commingling of such funds with institutional funds or with the funds of any other person other than another such resident, and

"(iii) upon such resident's death, promptly convey such resident's personal funds (and a final accounting of such funds) to the individual administering the resident's estate.

"(1) Administration.—

"(A) In general.—A skilled nursing facility must be administered in a manner that enables it to use its resources effectively and efficiently to attain or maintain the highest possible physical, mental, and psychosocial well-being of each resident (consistent with requirements established under subsection (d)(5)).

"(2) Licensing and life safety code.—

"(A) Licensing.—A skilled nursing facility must be licensed under applicable State and local law.

"(B) Life safety code.—A skilled nursing facility must meet such provisions of such edition (as specified by the Secretary in regulation) of the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association as are applicable to nursing homes; except that the provisions of such Code shall not apply in any State if the Secretary finds that in such State there is in effect a fire and safety code, imposed by State law, which provides protection for residents of and personnel in skilled nursing facilities at least equal to the protections provided under such Code.

"(3) Sanitary and infection control and physical environment.—A skilled nursing facility must—

"(A) establish and maintain an infection control program designed to provide a safe, sanitary, and comfortable environment in which residents reside and to help prevent the development and transmission of disease and infection, and

"(A) Compliance with federal, state, and local laws and professional standards.—A skilled nursing facility must operate and provide services in compliance with all applicable Federal, State, and local laws and regulations (including the requirements of sections 1124) and with all accepted professional standards and principles which apply to professionals providing services in such a facility.

"(B) Other.—A skilled nursing facility must meet such other requirements relating to the health, safety, and well-being of residents or relating to the physical facilities thereof as the Secretary may find necessary.".

"(i) offered by or in a skilled nursing facility which has been determined to be out of compliance with the requirements of subsection (a), (b), or (c) within the previous 2 years, or

"(ii) offered by a skilled nursing facility unless the State makes the determination, upon an individual's completion of the program, that the individual is competent to provide nursing and nursing-related services in skilled nursing facilities; and

"(B) maintain a registry of all individuals who have successfully completed either such program.

The registry under subparagraph (B) shall provide (in accordance with regulations of the Secretary) for the inclusion of specific findings of resident neglect or abuse involving an individual listed in the registry, notice to the individual of the proposed inclusion of such a finding with respect to the individual, and for the inclusion of any brief statement of the individual disputing the findings. In the case of inquiries to the registry concerning an individual listed in the registry, any information disclosed concerning such a finding shall also include disclosure of any such statement in the registry relating to the finding or a clear and accurate summary of such a statement.

"(d) Secretarial Responsibilities for Standards.—

"(2) Nurse aide training and testing programs.—

"(A) In general.—Not later than March 1, 1988, the Secretary shall establish—

(b) Specification of Requirements.—Section 1819 of such Act, as added by section

"(e) Survey and Certification Process.—

"(1) State and federal responsibility.—

"(A) In general.—Pursuant to an agreement under section 1864, each State shall be responsible for certifying, in accordance with surveys conducted under paragraph (2), the compliance of skilled nursing facilities (other than facilities of the State) with the requirements of subsections (a), (b), and (c). The Secretary shall be responsible for certifying, in accordance with surveys conducted under paragraph (2), the compliance of State skilled nursing facilities with the requirements of such subsections.

"(B) Educational program.—Each State shall conduct periodic educational programs for the staff and residents (and their representatives) of skilled nursing facilities in order to present current regulations, procedures, and policies under this section.

"(A) Standard survey.—

"(i) In general.—Each skilled nursing facility shall be subject to a standard survey, to be conducted without any prior notice to the facility. Any individual who notifies (or causes to be notified) a skilled nursing facility of the time or date on which such a survey is scheduled to be conducted is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $2,000. The Secretary shall provide for imposition of civil money penalties under this clause in a manner similar to that for the imposition of civil money penalties under section 1128A. The Secretary shall review each State's procedures for the scheduling and conduct of annual standard surveys to assure that the State has taken all reasonable steps to avoid giving notice of such a survey.

"(ii) Contents.—Each standard survey shall include—

"(I) an audit of a sample of the residents' assessments provided under subsection (a)(3) to determine the accuracy of such assessments;

"(II) a survey of the quality of care furnished as measured by indicators of medical, nursing, and rehabilitative care, using interviews and observations of a case-mix stratified sample of residents; and

"(III) a review of the facility's compliance with the requirements of subsection (a) (other than paragraph (3)), subsection (b), subsection (c)(1)(A) (insofar as it relates to the requirements described in subparagraphs (D) and (F) of subsection (d)(5)), and subsection (c)(3).

"(iii) Frequency.—

"(I) In general.—Each skilled nursing facility shall be subject to a standard survey not later than 15 months after the date of the previous standard survey under this subparagraph. The Statewide average interval between surveys of skilled nursing facilities under this subsection shall not exceed 12 months.

"(II) Special surveys.—If not otherwise conducted under subclause (I), a standard survey (or an abbreviated standard survey) may be conducted within 2 months of any change of ownership, administration, or management of a skilled nursing facility, in order to determine whether the change has resulted in any decline in the quality of care furnished in the facility.

"(B) Extended and followup surveys.—If a survey team determines that, because of the poor quality of care found in a skilled nursing facility during a standard survey of the facility, it would recommend the termination of participation of the facility under this title or the appointment of temporary management, the facility shall be subject to an extended survey. In such an extended survey, the survey team shall review and identify the policies and procedures which produced such poor quality of care and shall determine whether the facility has complied with all the requirements described in subsections (a), (b), and (c). Such review shall include an expansion of the size of the sample of residents' assessments reviewed and a review of the staffing, of in-service training, and, if appropriate, of contracts with consultants. Any other facility may, at the Secretary's or State's discretion, be subject to such an extended survey (or a partial extended survey).

"(C) Survey protocol.—Standard and extended surveys shall be conducted—

"(i) based upon a protocol which the Secretary has developed, tested, and validated by not later than January 1, 1989, and

"(ii) by individuals, of a survey team, who meet such minimum qualifications as the Secretary establishes by not later than January 1, 1989.

The failure of the Secretary to develop, test, or validate such protocols or to establish such minimum qualifications shall not relieve any State of its responsibility (or the Secretary of the Secretary's responsibility) to conduct surveys under this subsection.

"(D) Consistency of surveys.—Each State and the Secretary shall implement programs to measure and reduce inconsistency in the application of survey results among surveyors.

"(E) Prohibition of conflicts of interest.—A State may not use as a surveyor under this subsection an individual who is serving (or has served within the previous 2 years) as a consultant to any skilled nursing facility respecting compliance with the requirements of subsections (a), (b), and (c).

If the State has determined that an individual skilled nursing facility meets the requirements of subsections (a), (b), and (c) but the Secretary's determination is inconsistent with the findings of the State survey team, the Secretary's determination as to the compliance of the facility is binding and supersedes that of the State survey.

"(B) Remedies for poor performance.—If the Secretary finds, on the basis of such surveys, that a State's survey and certification performance is not adequate or that a State has failed to perform surveys as required under paragraph (2), the Secretary may provide for an appropriate remedy, which may include the training of the survey team or the designation of another State to perform survey and certification activities.

"(C) Special surveys of compliance.—Where the Secretary has reason to question the compliance of a skilled nursing facility with any of the requirements of subsections (a) through (c), the Secretary may conduct a survey of the facility and, on that basis, make independent and binding determinations concerning the extent to which the skilled nursing facility meets such requirements.

The Secretary shall provide, through regulations or otherwise by not later than October 1, 1988, guidance to States in establishing such remedies; but the failure of the Secretary to provide such guidance shall not relieve a State of the responsibility for establishing such remedies.

"(ii) A State may establish alternative remedies (other than termination of participation) other than those described in clauses (i) through (iv) of subparagraph (A), if the State demonstrates to the Secretary's satisfaction that the alternative remedies are as effective in deterring noncompliance and correcting deficiencies as those described in subparagraph (A).

"(4) Effective period of denial of payment.—A finding to deny payment under this subsection shall terminate when the State or Secretary (or both, as the case may be) finds that the facility is in substantial compliance with all the requirements of subsections (a) through (c).

"(5) Remedies where state or secretary finds noncompliance and immediate jeopardy.—If either the State or the Secretary finds that a skilled nursing facility has not met a requirement of subsection (a), (b), or (c) and finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, the State shall take immediate action to remove the jeopardy and correct the deficiency (including the appointment of temporary management and the denial of payment for new residents until the facility is in compliance with the requirements). If the State determines that it is necessary to terminate immediately the facility's participation agreement, the State shall provide for the safe and orderly transfer of the residents eligible under this title consistent with the requirements of subsection (b)(2).

"(6) Special rules where state and secretary do not agree on finding of noncompliance.—

"(A) State finding of noncompliance and no secretarial finding of noncompliance.—If the Secretary finds that a skilled nursing facility has met all the requirements of subsections (a) through (c), but a State finds that the facility has not met such requirements and the failure does not immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, the State's findings shall control and the remedies imposed by the State shall be applied.

"(B) Secretarial finding of noncompliance and no state finding of noncompliance.—If the Secretary finds that a skilled nursing facility has not met all the requirements of subsections (a) through (c) and that the failure does not immediately jeopardize the health or safety of its residents, but the State has not made such a finding, the Secretary may impose any remedies (other than termination of participation) with respect to the facility.

"(B) neither finds that the failure immediately jeopardizes the health or safety of its residents, and

"(C) both find that the facility's participation under the plan should be terminated, the State's determination of corrective actions and timing of such actions shall take precedence over similar determinations by the Secretary so long as such actions do not occur later than 6 months after the date of the finding of noncompliance.

"(8) Construction.—The remedies provided under this subsection are in addition to those otherwise available under State or Federal law and shall not be construed as limiting such other remedies. The remedies described in clause (i), (iii), or (iv) of paragraph (2)(A) may be imposed during the pendency of any hearing.

"(9) Sharing of information.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all information concerning skilled nursing facilities required by this section to be filed with the Secretary or a State agency shall be made available to Federal or State employees for purposes consistent with the effective administration of programs established under this title and title XIX.".

SEC. 10169. SENSE OF CONGRESS AS TO INCREASED INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE FUNDING FOR TAXPAYER ASSISTANCE AND ENFORCEMENT.

(a) Findings.—The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) the Internal Revenue Service estimates that the amount of taxes owed for 1986 will exceed the amount of taxes collected for such year by $100 billion;

(2) the current taxpayer compliance rate stands at 81.5 percent;

(3) the tax gap can be significantly reduced by enhancing taxpayer assistance services and enforcement; and

(4) the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, in its fiscal year 1988 Internal Revenue Service appropriation, took a step in the direction of providing additional funding for taxpayer assistance and enforcement efforts.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that:

(1) The Congress increase outlays for the Internal Revenue Service in fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1990 in the areas of taxpayer assistance and enforcement by $.7 billion in fiscal year 1989 for a revenue total of $3.2 billion and by $.8 billion in fiscal year 1990 for a revenue total of $4.4 billion. The net revenue increase would be $2.5 billion in fiscal year 1989 and $3.6 billion in fiscal year 1990, or a net revenue increase over the House Appropriations Committee recommendations of $.4 billion in fiscal year 1989 and $1.3 billion in fiscal year 1990.

(2) The Internal Revenue Service offer improved taxpayer assistance and enforcement efforts by using the aforementioned outlays in areas recommended by, or consistent with the recommendations of, the "Dorgan Task Force Report". Taxpayer assistance efforts would include providing expanded taxpayer education programs, instituting pilot programs of taxmobiles in rural areas, and upgrading the quality of telephone assistance. Taxpayer enforcement efforts would include raising the audit rate from 1.1 percent toward 2.5 percent, restoring resources to criminal investigations, and the collection of delinquent accounts.

(3) The Congress should undertake an experimental multiyear authorization and 2-year appropriation for the Internal Revenue Service consistent with the recommendations in Public Law 100-119, Sec. 201 (Increasing the Statutory Limit on the Public Debt).

(4) Increased funding should be provided for compilation and analysis of statistics of income and research.

The Internal Revenue Service must issue a report on the extent of the tax gap and the measures that could be undertaken to decrease the tax gap. The report must utilize more current data than has been utilized recently. The report must be issued by April 15, 1989. The Internal Revenue Service must also report annually on the improvements being made in the audit rate, taxpayer assistance, and enforcement efforts.

SEC. 9237. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as otherwise specifically provided, the amendments made by this part shall become effective October 1, 1987.

Mr. MICHEL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] will be recognized for 30 minutes in opposition.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Chairman, earlier in the day, or should I say the legislative day before, after the vote on the defeated rule I offered conciliation. There was no reason to gloat over our victory. I said we should wait until the budget summit comes up with its recommendations and only then bring our reconciliation bill to the floor of this House.

There has been no conciliation, only parliamentary trickery in the intervening period. There have been no hands across the aisle. We extended ours only to have it cut off.

And the Nation is not served by that kind of partisan strife, discord, and abuse of power.

I cannot, I will not give up my deeply rooted belief that civility and comity, fairness and decent treatment are absolutely essential in a democratic institution. Those are the marks of bipartisan cooperation.

Perhaps I am wrong. Perhaps we have come to a time when sheer power is frankly all that counts. I hope not.

Mr. Chairman, not every exercise in power is an exercise in wisdom. Not every show of force is a show of responsibility.

Even stripped of its welfare provisions, bringing this bill to the floor in an atmosphere of national economic crisis is the functional equivalent of driving while drunk, reckless, irresponsible, and dangerous to ourselves and others.

On Tuesday, October 20, the Speaker of the House came to the floor to make an eloquent plea for an economic summit. At the beginning of his remarks he said the following: "Today is not a day for partisanship. This is the day to set aside partisan political posturing, finger pointing, and blame placing—a time to face reality and seek solutions that build confidence in America," the Speaker.

Little more than a week after those words were spoken, the Speaker has brought to the floor, twice in one calendar day, incidentally, a reconciliation bill whose blatantly political features make it all the more difficult to resolve our differences ultimately at that summit meeting.

Stripping the bill of the welfare provision has not made it all that much better. It only sets forth the other bad provisions in starker relief.

And even as we speak, the majority is marking up a continuing resolution appropriation bill, the largest in the history of the Republic, and totaling better than $600 billion in discretionary spending.

So we have no choice than to offer an amendment.

And what does our amendment do?

It provides an across-the-board freeze for all discretionary spending. Savings are broken down this way:

$4.8 billion domestic spending; $6.4 billion in defense spending; a total of $11.2 billion.

The amendment would implement the freeze by requiring the Appropriations Committee to revise its 302(b) allocations for each subcommittee to reflect the freeze. And our amendment also includes the language of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] strengthening child support enforcement under welfare reform.

The revenue section of our amendment strikes out all of the tax increases with the exception of the ESOP and technical correction sections. The result is an increase of $1.3 billion in revenues over current levels.

This brings us to the following total deficit reduction:

Spending freeze, $11.2 billion; spending reductions in the bill, $2.5 billion; revenues $1.3 billion, or a total of $15 billion.

My colleagues may say that is short of $23 billion, and it sure is. But I will tell them it matches dollar for dollar of real savings to what we have got in the majority's bill, and that is what we are here to say in unvarnished terms.

Now that is not to say that what we ultimately have got to come up with in the summit is that figure. It has got to be $23 billion at a minimum, but in real savings. And we submit that the way you get this is to have real expenditure savings first before you talk in terms of revenue.

And I am not going to say here, even among all of my colleagues, that this Member will ever have his feet bound in such concrete that he cannot give and take when that time comes. But the expenditure reduction in the majority proposal is on the cum. We have not finalized one appropriation bill, not one of the 13 has been sent to the President for signature or veto. We do not know what we have in hand, and that is why we say, and justifiably so, I think, that we are proposing a spending freeze.

The vote on the rule this morning sent a short-lived message of hope to millions of Americans, but here we are deferring hope once again.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment because it will not only help to reform this reconciliation bill, but will build a bridge over the abyss that has so long separated the rhetoric of the majority from the actions we need.

I ask my colleagues to help us build the bridge by voting for my amendment, and then walk with us over that bridge toward the summit.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, let me just say that across-the-board freezes, spending freezes, have an allure. They seem to be very simple and very fair, but nothing could be further from the truth. Let me cite just one example.

We are in the midst of one of the greatest health crisis that this Nation has faced, the AIDS epidemic. The fiscal 1987 budget and appropriation to meet that crisis was $470 million. The fiscal 1988 proposal by the President of the United States is for $790 million because of the enormity of the crisis.

The Appropriations Committee has already appropriated in the House $970 million, and the Senate has gone along with it, and yet the proposal offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] would cut that by more than 50 percent.

That is just one very serious example of where spending freezes take you. It is really buying a pig in a poke and I urge the defeat of the Michel amendment.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Speaker, Mr. WRIGHT, and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, to come to the floor before we vote on the Michel amendment, because the tax provisions in the Democratic bill are outrageous.

While freezing the estate tax for most people, for example, it includes a $4 million forgiveness, as I understand it, for the Ballard family. On another occasion it includes a $2 million rehabilitation tax credit for the Claridge Hotel in Chicago. The Bureau of National Affairs has eight pages of specific goodies given away apparently at the request of specific Members, and I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] the Speaker, owes us an explanation of who the Ballard family is and why they deserve $4 million.

And, Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI ought to tell us does the $2 million go to the English company that owns the Claridge Hotel or does it go to some local folks who used to own the Tuscany Hotel as it was then called?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Republican leader's amendment to the reconciliation package. This amendment includes my provisions on child support enforcement as outlined in H.R. 1604.

There is a principle involved here on the child support amendments. But these reform amendments are also revenue savers and as such this reconciliation is a correct vehicle for their adoption. Preliminary CBO estimates are—$1,190 million for 3 years; $1,585 million for 5 years.

Many of you will remember my long involvement with the issue of child support enforcement reform from earlier Congresses. And it is true that we enacted landmark reform in 1984. However, our experience has shown us clearly that more needs to be done. We must go further. The Democratic bill ignores the issue. Mr. MICHEL's substitute addresses it head on.

Recent statistics show that 5 million women hold legally binding child support enforcement orders, yet only half of them receive the full amount of these payments. The rest receive little or in most cases, no support whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot let this injustice go on. We must enact legislation that addresses this problem and closes the loopholes in the present system. My amendments attack the problems as follows:

First, require mandatory wage withholding of child support payments from the parent's wages from the time a support order is signed;

Second, mandate the courts to set State-established guidelines when determining the actual size of the child support payments;

Third, have the States to review each individual case every 2 years to determine if the support orders are keeping pace with inflation and the parent's salary levels;

Fourth, force States to disclose essential enforcement information; and Fifth, slap stiffer penalties for States that intentionally or unintentionally serve as safe-havens for delinquents.

Of these five commonsense reforms, there are two lynch-pins. Mandatory immediate wage withholding of child support payments wage will prevent the current 30-day grace period from stretching into delinquency periods of months. And, because the nationwide enforcement network is only as good as the efforts of the separate States, stiffer penalties for noncomplying States will prevent States from serving intentionally or unintentionally as safe havens for child support delinquents.

This is not only an issue of welfare reform, it is simple justice for the over 3 million women who collect little or nothing at all of the payments legally due to them.

Let's not turn our backs on these children. Support the Michel substitute and save $585 million over 5 years.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express support for the Michel amendment. It goes about the task of reducing the deficit by establishing a freeze in fiscal year 1988. That is a constructive way to do it. But I want to bring to my colleagues' attention, at this opportunity, some information I think we all need to have brought before us from time to time. And that is that there are recommendations lying around, unimplemented, whereby we can cut spending if we have the will to do it. The Grace Commission recommendations that have been overseen by OMB or constructively analyzed to make sure there is validity to them, total some $11.9 billion. They are in the domestic spending category. Nondefense programs, CBO recommends a total of some $10.2 billion and defense programs, CBO totals some $2.1 billion.

In other words, we have here $24.2 billion of recommended reductions in spending that come from responsible sources in the Federal process that we can implement to achieve spending reductions if we have the will to do it.

Mr. Chairman, we are deliberating a bill which is grossly misnamed. There is nothing conciliatory about it. Congress is playing the loan shark, extorting money from taxpayers. This ill-disguised tax increase does not reduce spending, it does not curb congressional excess, it makes neither amends nor apologies for fiscal mismanagement of the Federal budget. It looks the American taxpayer in the eye and threatens "you will have to pay more; you have no choice."

This is an asinine way to run a government. The leadership of this institution refuses to make the hard decisions necessary to reduce spending. By all means, avoid responsibility. Don't offend those politically active special interest groups who salivate with rapacious appetite at the public trough.

We don't need to be doing this, of course. There are alternative measures we could be undertaking. Sequestration under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is one possibility, but we are reluctant to make major cutbacks in needed programs. There is no doubt that some of these cuts would hurt, especially in defense.

But there are other options. Both the Congressional Budget Office and the Grace Commission have identified hundreds of possible program changes which would save billions of dollars. In fact, when deliberating the first concurrent resolution on the budget earlier this year, I offered a substitute which included $24.2 billion in budget reductions from CBO and Grace proposals. The reconciliation package we are considering today claims only $4.9 billion in savings. And, significantly, $24.2 billion not only exceeds the total deficit reduction of $17.2 billion contained in the reconciliation bill, it matches the savings necessary to avoid sequestration.

Monetary policy has become a hot topic of debate in the past 2 weeks. Some of us have been making the point for years that we need sound monetary policy in order to achieve budget and economic stability. The recent reaction of the stock market has borne witness to the validity of this assertion. Investors do not believe Government leaders who reiterate empty slogans about all is well, all is under control, and how we all remain "bullish on America." Neither will anyone but fools buy the argument that we can prop up the existing system with more of the same remedies, such as this reconciliation bill.

We will not have balanced budgets and equitable trade balances until we first control the roller coaster ride of the dollar. And the value of the dollar needs to be anchored. Congressional policies are counterproductive, budget policies are bankrupt, and responsible monetary policies do not exist. Treasury has no direction and the Fed has no plan. There is something fundamentally wrong with Government leadership: it is all misadvised talk and misapplied action.

We do have the ability and the means to instill some semblance of order in the scheme of things. We do not need to resort to tax increases to reduce the deficit. We don't even need to make a slasher sequel and do a "Texas Chainsaw Massacre, Part IV" number on pet spending projects. We pay approximately $200 billion in a given year in interest on public debt, equalling or surpassing annual budget deficits. We can refinance much of this debt by issuing long-term, gold-backed bonds and eliminate the deficit over 3 or 4 years.

Gold bonds could achieve savings of $736 billion over a 10-year period, on a turnover of about $1.4 trillion of marketable debt. But Treasury and the Fed are reluctant to rock the boat, despite the fact that the ship is sinking and needs a major overhaul. The option exists of implementing a sound monetary policy necessary to stabilize our economy and control our budgets, or we can continue down the not-so-primrose path of "business as usual" and allow the course of human events to overtake us.

The choice is ours. We can impose a greater burden on the taxpayers of today and thereby merely delay the inevitable day of financial reckoning on the generations of tomorrow. Or we can utilize our gold reserves, put them to good use, anchor the dollar, stabilize our financial system, control inflation and interest rates, restrain Federal spending, eliminate the trade imbalance, and foster a more productive economic climate. And it is relatively painless, except to those international bankers who are earning money on the financial misfortune of this country.

I include copies of these spending reductions at this point in the RECORD:

EAGLE BOND REFINANCING FORMULA

1. Amount of marketable debt falling due in given year	$625 billion
2. Old (current) effective interest rate on that debt	7.0 percent
3. Bond rate on newly issued gold bonds	1.0 percent
4. New effective rate	4.0 percent
Since all debt does not mature at the same time, it is refinanced gradually throughout the year; hence the new rate is the average of the old and bond rates on an annualized basis.
5. Gross differential between old and bond rates	6.0 percent
6. Total savings	$37 billion

Amount of savings derived from applying gross differential to debt: this represents the maximum interest savings resulting from the maximum decline in rates.
7. Net differential between old and new rates	3.0 percent
8. Annual savings	$19 billion
Amount of savings derived from applying net differential to debt; this represents the net interest savings resulting from the decline in effective annual rates.
9. Carryover	$18 billion

The difference between total and annual savings is carried over into the subsequent year since all maturing debt will eventually be refinanced at the bond rate.
Cumulative savings	$19 billion + −
The total in a given year of annual savings plus any carryover from the previous year, added to previous cumulative savings to achieve aggregate annual interest savings.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Also I would like to observe for the balance of the time that I have remaining that it is time that we talk about long-term reform of the monetary process that is at the basis of the instability and driving the Federal budget deficit and the Federal trade deficit. That is dealing with interest rates and maintaining the national debt.

My colleagues will recall that we are now paying about $200 billion a year to maintain the national debt of some $2.3 trillion. That is an average interest cost of about 9 percent.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I still reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. ROBERTS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I regret in some ways that I feel compelled to make these comments. I am not on the Ways and Means, Budget, or Rules Committee.

I am one of the back rail troops who gladly yield to my often spoken colleagues when they get into the business of becoming instant Secretaries of State, Defense, Agriculture, and in this case Treasury. But, today is different.

Today is unique. We have, by manipulation of the rules, combined 2 days into one. This is better than daylight saving time. Better we should have rolled 7 days into one, rested on the eighth day and then filed an environmental impact statement. And, judging what is happening to the comity of this noble House and the effect this aberration will have upon the American public and the economy, that impact statement should be a cease and desist order.

What are we doing? What on Earth are we doing? According to the leadership, we are fulfilling our constitutional responsibility in stepping up to our deficit crisis. We have that responsibility all right but we sure as heck do not have a constitutional responsibility to make matters worse!

If the leadership was to advise George Washington at Valley Forge, freezing in the winter, they would doubtlessly advise him to tax the firewood.

This bill is being shoved, pushed, and rammed through this House at the very time our national leadership is striving to reach some bipartisan accord in deficit reduction. The folks calling these shots are the very folks taking part in the discussions.

My colleague and friend from Kansas says we are nitpicking and we should rise above partisanship—that this freeze is not real enough if you will. But, in his package, we have tax measures that most say are exactly opposite of what we need to build confidence in the market. I cannot even find out what tax measures are in this bill that effect cash accounting and estate taxes in farm country.

The real reason the orginial rule was defeated was in part due to concern over the alleged welfare reform, but it also reflected concern and frustration by Republicans and Democrats alike—boll weevils turned cicadas—that without real spending cuts a tax increase would not be applied to the deficit.

We do not take revenues and put them in a cigar box behind the Speaker's chair for him to deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury. We spend it. If you believe these revenues will be applied to the deficit you are like the missionary who invited himself to the cannibal's barbecue.

Why this substitute? The cats and dogs and turkeys and snakes and creepy and crawly things better suited for Halloween have not even been tallied up in this bill.

A congressional pay raise?

Reducing the deficit by charging tankers from Kuwait $250,000. We ought to charge at least $1 million from Iran for each silkworm they fire.

We waive import duties on ethanol coming to this country from Brazil—we in the Agriculture Committee backed off mandating more ethanol be used to reduce our costs—we took that out. You put it back in.

But never mind all of that. Let the record show I will continue to work with my friends across the aisle on any reasonable deficit package. Lock in spending cuts with this freeze, reduce the capital gains tax, I'll look at a revenue package. The first step would be to support this substitute—no its not enough but it is a step forward—something we can build on.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG].

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, this bill which has been brought forward to us can only be improved by the passage of the Michel substitute. But as a practical matter, the underlying bill is so fundamentally flawed that it has to be defeated. It is basically the flat Earth theory of economics. It believes that if you raise taxes at a time when the market is showing a jitteriness and has dropped in value that if you squeeze out of the economy more of the productive dollars and put them into the nonproductive public sector that you somehow improve the economic forces within the economy, the economic dynamism of the economy, and cause it to be more effective. That is obviously not going to work. That is a tax bill. To pass a tax bill at this time is totally inane. It is a tax bill.

Let us talk about some of the specifics. There is $14 billion of new taxes. Now why the $14 billion of new taxes? Well, quite honestly the $14 billion of new taxes, because they actually only needed $12 million in a reconciliation bill but it costs an extra $2 billion of special interest benefits in order to get this $14 billion altogether, so for the $14 billion of new taxes we had to give away 2 billion dollars' worth of tax benefits.

Some of these new taxes are totally regressive. There is, for example, the takeover language tax in this bill. We all know that the stock market crashed on Monday. We know this bill was passed the Thursday before that Monday. And there is a lot to say that this crash was caused by that takeover language.

There is also the tip language which requires withholding on tips. I want to tell you that when the small restaurants in your district find out that the waitress has to have her tips withheld they are going to be very upset. There is the cafeteria language. It is a direct attack on the two-earner family, on the person where there are two spouses working and one of the spouses has decided not to assume some of the liabilities of taking on the benefits of a pension or a health program at their place of work but rather wishes to share the benefits of their working spouse. This is a direct attack on that working spouse.

This is a horrendous bill and should be defeated.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. MEYERS].

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, we should be standing back from this issue and allowing the summit to do its work. But here we are on Thursday-and-a-half, after many devious complicated ways of getting this bill before us, dealing with reconciliation. So we should be dealing at least with a measure that makes some sense. We know that if we raise $12 billion in new taxes, it will be spent for new programs and will not help resolve the deficit problem. As proof of this we see there was new spending of $5 billion in the bill until this morning when the Republicans defeated the rule. In this bill there is real savings and reform in spending, $11.2 billion in the freeze, $3.5 billion in cuts and $1.3 billion in new revenue that will reach into the outyears.

I urge my colleagues to at least improve upon this measure, support the Michel substitute.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SWINDALL].

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Chairman, we all know that if one goes about the business of trying to cure an illness after having misdiagnosed it, they know that the illness gets worse rather than better.

The problem with the reconciliation that we are considering here is that the reason we have a deficit is because we have been taxed too little. The fact of the matter is this: Since 1981, revenues have increased by 43 percent, $256 billion. Revenues have increased by $256 billion.

Expenditures have increased by 50 percent or $326 billion.

It is very important that we understand why we have this deficit. If we do not understand that we will take all the wrong medicine.

Why is that important? Because underlying this debate is a very fundamental issue and that is: Do we want to continue, as the majority have stated they want to continue, to redistribute the wealth which eventually causes us not to create wealth? Or do we want to stimulate an economy where you create wealth by giving individuals the opportunity to spend their own money? Federal Governments can never, ever, ever create wealth. All they can do is redistribute it.

Every time we take money out of the American pocket and put it into the Federal coffers, we are taking money that could be reproducing and we are basically killing our children's futures.

I would urge my colleagues to vote for the Michel substitute, not because it achieves enough deficit reduction—clearly it does not—but because what it does is achieve, and achieve correctly, because it understands that we have this deficit not because of the myth that has floated around this city that we have not had enough revenue but rather because this bill recognizes we have been spending too much.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we have listened to the debate. First, let me compliment the distinguished minority leader for offering an alternative. This is a very positive step. I want to applaud the distinguished leader for his action, because when we were in debates earlier, we did not always have this point and counterpoint.

We now have another plan coming from our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. Let me just simply say that it is attractive if we do not look too closely at it. However, if we put our glasses on and get up close, what we are going to see are some very disturbing things and some major differences in terms of the plan offered by the leadership of the House and the minority plan.

First, the Michel plan has $18.5 billion in all of its deficit reduction actions. That is laudable. It is good. But the Gramm-Rudman target is $23 billion. So thus we would miss the target by almost $5 billion, whereas the plan of reconciliation which we have proposed has $23 billion toward a $23 billion target, with $14.5 billion in reconciliation, and we specify from appropriation accounts where we will get the other in terms of the $7 billion, from 302 and other areas.

No. 2, the Michel amendment has about $5.3 billion in reconciled cuts. That is when you back out the appropriations.

So I would just remind our colleagues of this: Do they remember what happened when we had the appropriation bills on the floor? Many of the same Members who have spoken so wonderfully about deficit reduction and the need for leadership, when the appropriation bills came along, would not vote against those bills because they wanted the things there for their districts.

I would just simply say that the Michel amendment depends a great deal on discretionary appropriated accounts to achieve the savings. Thus, as we vote, if we want $14.5 billion in reconciled savings, we should vote for the House budget package. If we want only $5.3 billion and then depend on the discretionary appropriators, then we should vote for the Michel amendment.

I should also point out that the Michel amendment deletes $9 billion in tax loophole closings and substitutes language calling for an appropriation freeze. Well, let us talk about the freeze. Everybody likes the sound of a freeze. We want to freeze spending. Let us talk about what it does.

Let us freeze FAA. I remember debate right here on the floor just 2 or 3 weeks ago where most of the Members on the opposite side of the aisle went to the well and talked about air safety and how we had to increase spending and, therefore, voted that way. Now they are being told in the Michel amendment that we should vote for a freeze. Well, that freeze would cut out $162 million for FAA operations.

Let me point to another one. A freeze sounds good, but how many Members of this House want to reduce NIH by $150 million?

A freeze sounds good. I wonder how many Members want to cut by $392 million veterans' medical care for those who have served their country and defended our freedoms? Is that the kind of priorities that we want to achieve? No, I do not think so.

I do not think Members want to cut $150 million out of NIH programs that fight cancer, AIDS research, heart disease, arthritis, diabetes, and basic research. I do not think they want to cut $162 million out of FAA operations. But that is what we get when we vote for the Michel amendment.

In all, in total, Mr. Chairman, I believe that that is not what the House wants in priorities. We want deficit reduction, but we want more reconciled deficit reductions. We get that in the House Budget Committee bill, $14.5 billion as opposed to $5.3 billion.

As I watched the appropriation bills come through, I for one know what is going to happen. If we should pass the Michel amendment today, it will be interesting to see what happens next week when the appropriation bills come through.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply say to the Members in conclusion that there is something else we learn today with regard to this so-called freeze that produced $11 billion. We call it the Miller freeze. Well, last night we put together a bipartisan team of scorekeepers in the budget summit. They got together, the Republican scorekeepers, the Democratic scorekeepers, and OMB, and guess what? We found out that the so-called Miller freeze from which they are working is not a freeze. Actually the deficit reduction in the function 050, Defense, is not what it claims to be, because OMB put in a $5 billion increase in the baseline. So if we vote for the Michel freeze, we will not get $11.1 billion or $11.2 billion in savings on the discretionary accounts of defense and nondefense; what we will get is somewhere around $6 billion, and about $5 billion of it will come out of domestic and only $1.5 billion will come out of defense.

We debated that today in our summit, and it was interesting to see the reaction of some of my Republican colleagues who were surprised at the unexplained blip in the baseline.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are the differences. I urge the Members to look carefully before they buy at this time.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, before yielding time to any more of my colleagues, I yield myself such time as I may consume so that I may respond in some measure to the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee.

Mr. Chairman, in the first place, the latest comment with respect to the disparity between budget authority and outlays with respect to the comments of the Budget Director, have no relevance whatsoever in what we are attempting to do, because our figure in our amendment frankly matches the distinguished chairman's figure on the defense item itself.

The gentleman talks about cuts in spending. How can we have a cut when we freeze the current level of spending at its present rate? That is no cut. It is a freeze at the current level. You can make all kinds of pitches here about what programs are going to be hurt and endangered, but what we mandate the Appropriations Committee to do is to go back and revamp their 302(b) allocations. We do not strike at each line item. It is up to them then to make those adjustments in house.

If FAA needs an increase, that subcommittee can very well take care of that if they want to cut out some other program. The current appropriations bill that is going to come before us next week in the mega-mega bucks area is $9 billion over last year's spending alone, and what we are attempting to do by way of our amendment is give the appropriators a message: Look, a freeze is a popular thing. It is an acceptable kind of thing. We say to them, "We would like you to conform to what we think basically most of our constituents and, yes, a good measure of this House would like to have come to pass."

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Michel amendment, not because it is the ideal approach but because it will send the right message, the strong message. It is not the ideal approach because it would be nice to pick and choose, but I and some of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle stood here in the well on every single appropriation bill and offered individual, specific cuts in order to achieve cuts commensurate with the tax increases that were being proposed. We tried it. This House voted them down.

We have no option now except to do what this amendment does, which is responsible. It says we cannot spend this year any more than we spent last year. It does not cut a thing. If FAA needs more controllers—and there is not anything else in DOT that is more important than more controllers—we will slow down the number of landings and we will have the same safety quotient.

What this amendment does is send the right message to Wall Street, to the stock market and the international markets. And why? Because the message that the majority party of the House and Senate sent 10 days ago was a devastating message. It said, by even reducing the target from $36 billion, we were going to achieve that target two-thirds with revenue increases. That is a bad message, not just in fact but in fancy. It says there is no discipline in this House, there is no readiness to face up to problems, and there is no desire to face up to the enormity of the deficit.

My second message here is, I believe, equally important. The markets saw that message about deficit reduction as being a message about protectionism. If we talk to the people who watch the markets carefully, they will tell us that it was a double-barreled message. It was not just a budget message that was sent through this reconciliation bill; it was a message that said this House would not stand up to the protectionist forces that are driving portions of the trade bill. And what happened in the 1930's? Protectionism and increased taxes triggered a worldwide depression that we must protect our constituents from.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Chairman, as I walked over here this evening trying to sort out in my head what I might say, I thought about this. I rise first of all in opposition to the Republican substitute, but as I walked over here, I was inclined to simply say this: I did not know whether I should talk in favor of certain aspects of the Republican substitute and against others, or whether I should talk in favor of certain aspects of the Democratic plan and against others. But I think what I am going to do is take a positive approach and say that I wish there were some way that we could take part of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] is offering and we could take part of what the majority is offering, and I think we would have the beginning or the makings of a pretty darned good plan.

What we would have is basically this: we would have a deficit reduction plan that would include roughly $11 billion in spending reductions from a freeze, saying we would spend the same next year or this year as we spent last year, $11 billion by freezing discretionary spending at last year's levels. We would have, I believe, roughly $4 to $5 billion in savings from entitlement programs. We would have roughly $12 billion in new revenues. We would have probably $2 billion to $3 billion in savings then from interest on the debt by reducing our interest on the debt.

If we add it up, it adds up pretty close to $30 billion. I have not sat down and actually done that this evening, but it is about $30 billion. The best part about it is that it would be real. It would not be smoke and mirrors. These would be real savings.

I suspect that the negotiations between the Congress and the White House have broken up for the day, but if anybody is tuned in, let me say this: I know we have a couple of Members on the floor here who are serving as part of that team. I would ask that they take this, as those negotiations begin again tomorrow or this weekend or next Monday, into consideration, because they might want to take that back. I think we have there the elements of a compromise. We borrow from the best of both plans. I think it is worth considering. I think it might very well be worth doing.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the time.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Michel substitute and in opposition to the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, even though I vigorously oppose this measure because it guarantees tax increases without guaranteeing budget cuts, I do support the sections pertaining to veterans. Once again, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs has done its part on behalf of veterans to reduce the Federal deficit which hurts all Americans, not just veterans. We have actually saved $22 million more than instructed over 3 years—$112 million instead of $90 million.

As SONNY MONTGOMERY, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, points out, veterans are willing to sacrifice for the good of our great country. Many of them made sacrifices far beyond the call of duty while wearing the uniform of our Armed Forces, and now a grateful Nation compensates them for their disabilities.

But they do not demand that they receive their due no matter what. They are still patriotic and responsible. All they ask is that others be willing to join them in accepting reduced benefits, if benefits are to be reduced as part of the overall effort to reduce the deficit. If they are being unreasonable, I can't figure out how.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, I, for one, absolutely will not agree to veterans' benefits being treated any differently than any other benefit, when it comes to reductions. Nobody has a stronger claim on the Federal dollar than veterans, and if any attempt is made to deal with veterans unfairly, I am confident I would have a lot of company in the fight against it.

The Committee on Veterans' Affairs has held the line year after year on spending. In inflation adjusted dollars, the VA's health care budget has not increased in more than 10 years, and I'm more than willing to compare that record to any agency or department in the entire Federal Government.

Again, as my good friend from Mississippi points out, and it bears repeating, veterans' programs have not caused the budget crisis. Yet veterans will do their part to get Federal spending under control, and their part of this reconciliation act confirms it.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I am tempted to rise in support of the Carper amendment at this time because I think he just put his finger right on top of the problem. But I do rise in support of the Michel amendment for one major reason.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, am I not correct that the gentleman from Texas requested a rule that would for all practical purposes have provided for about that kind of mix, because the gentleman is wedded to having probably an equal mix between revenues and expenditures, and, frankly, it might have been surprising to see what support there might have been for that proposition.

□ 1850

The gentleman is totally correct. We were denied that opportunity to offer the amendment. The next best thing is to support the gentleman from Illinois in the gentleman's attempt to do exactly the same thing.

The reason I support the gentleman is because the gentleman has been 100 percent in his voting on spending bills.

We have had 23 spending bills before this body this year on appropriations, and that is the time when we in this body can have an effect on spending.

If we assume a 70 is a passing grade, as our children in schools must, the Members must vote 70 percent of the time for cutting spending when there is the opportunity, and 19 of my fellow Democrats passed, 120 Republicans passed, a total of 139.

The chairman of the Committee on the Budget was totally correct in his analysis of the problem that we have in this body. The rhetoric tonight really does not fit the problem. We have had a lot about taxes in the Democratic package, and I support the taxes in the Democratic package, not that I agree with every one, but the revenue I support.

The President had in his budget $8 billion, so we are fussing about $4 billion. I ask all of the Members, is all of the rhetoric we have heard 100-percent accurate?

We are finally toning down the rhetoric and talking about where we really are. The Democratic package, it is $12.2 billion in spending cuts, and in the Michel substitute it is 16.7, and I am going to vote for the Michel amendment, because it is the closest I can do to cutting spending, and that is really the problem.

If we take 12.4 and 16.7 in the Michel amendment, that is $4½ billion in total spending out of a trillion and $66 billion budget.

I ask the Members on both sides, as we wind down the debate, is it really helpful for the Members to have some of the rhetoric that we are having pointing the fingers at each other when we are only $4 billion apart on revenue between the President and the Congress, and we are $4½ billion apart in spending?

My point is, we have got to do more on spending if we are going to get the budget under control. We have not shown in our votes on either side of the aisle that we are ready to do that yet.

Vote for the Michel amendment and get another $4½ billion in spending cuts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] has 6½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I would like to inquire of the Chair who has the right of closing on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], as chairman of the committee has the right to close debate.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in support of the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, described some Members a little while ago as being surprised about what the Members find in some of these packages.

I discovered earlier today that there were some Members who were surprised to find that in this package, there is a pay increase for Members of Congress, because as soon as I mentioned that on the floor, the phones in my office began to ring off the hook wondering what it was I talking about.

Let me say it again. There is a $2,700 pay increase for Members of Congress in the bill. Members ought to know that when the Members are voting on it.

The Michel amendment does not speak to that in any way. The Michel amendment does not contain a pay increase, or it does not speak to the pay increase, but speaks to other areas of the bill. It is a perfecting amendment.

In voting for the Michel amendment, Members are not voting for a pay increase. If you vote for final passage of this, whether with or without the Michel amendment, you are in fact voting for a pay increase.

Earlier in this Congress we passed a cost-of-living increase, and then we passed a $12,000 increase. This would be the third pay increase in this year.

Our salaries will go with this pay increase from $89,500 to $92,000. I would suggest that some of the public may not understand that.

If the Members believe that deficit reduction means raising our own salaries, then vote for this bill. If the Members think that a pay increase for ourselves does not sound much like deficit reduction, I suggest you probably would have to vote against this bill; but please never, never say that no Member told you about the $2,700 pay increase that is in this bill.

It is plain to the voters that you voted to raise their taxes so that you could raise your pay.

I would like to be there for that explanation, because I would like to see the public reaction.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. Boxer].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Michel amendment. First of all, it is really a mindless way to cut the deficit, across the board. I do not know about Members who are supporting this amendment, but I was sent here to make some tough choices, and it is not easy to do that. We have got to do it.

I was not sent here to close my eyes, hold my ears, and let some other Member just slash equally across the board. There is another problem with the Michel amendment.

It may look like it is treating domestic spending and military spending equally, but it is not, because one has to think of what has come before.

What we have seen in the last 6 years is after inflation, military spending has gone up 40 percent. It gets frozen in the Michel amendment.

Domestic spending, on the other hand, has gone down 20 percent after inflation. It gets treated in the same way. It makes no sense.

It is a slaughter of domestic programs.

Across-the-board cuts, let us talk about AIDS research where we have thousands who have died, 23,000, and maybe 2 million people infected with the virus.

We are going to go back to last year's level when even the President said this is the No. 1 health priority, and we should increase spending dramatically.

Cancer research, narcotics control, air traffic control, these are areas where we should not just close our eyes and hold our ears, and cut across the board, so for those reasons I strongly urge defeat.

I think this is an irresponsible way to cut the deficit. Also, the fact that everything is coming out of the spending side, very few revenues, it is going to wreck havoc on the economy; and I think Wall Street is watching, and Wall Street would not like this approach.

Let me give you some examples of programs which would be affected if we let this amendment pass:

Compensatory education programs for disadvantaged children would be cut despite this program's track record in improving reading and math scores for low-income children.

Appropriations for Head Start would be reduced; estimates indicate that 50,000 fewer children would be served if the cuts under the Michel amendment were implemented.

The WIC Program serving low income pregnant women, infants, and children would have to terminate service to 125,000 recipients, despite the fact that the program has been shown to reduce infant mortality.

Funding for AIDS, a serious public health crisis, will be held to last year's level cutting back a $500 million necessary funding increase. This will preclude initiation of much needed research, prevention, and treatment programs while thousands of Americans die.

Mr. Chairman, these are just a few examples of programs which will be adversely impacted if we pass this disastrous substitute. Also think of the impact of such cuts on our air traffic control system, our toxic waste clean up and needed drug abuse prevent programs.

This amendment, my friends, is a disaster. We must defeat it!

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Frost].

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Michel substitute, and we should be very clear about what we have before the Members.

When the Members take an across-the-board approach, we do in fact affect some very valuable, important programs that even members of the minority would recognize are valuable.

What we have tried to do in developing the budget resolution throughout this year is to cut those programs that deserve to be cut, and to increase those programs that are in the national interest.

I would like to talk a little bit about programs in the health area. I chair the health task force for the Committee on the Budget.

The Michel amendment/substitute, if it is adopted, would have the following effect on health programs:

It would reduce AIDS funding by $14 million. It would reduce VA medical care by $392 million.

It would reduce alcohol, drug abuse and mental health funding by $44 million.

It would reduce funding for the Centers for Disease Control by $21 million.

It would reduce funding for maternal and child health by $20 million.

It would reduce funding for community health centers by $11 million, and reduce funding for Indian health by $35 million, and reduce Medicare administrative costs by $95 million, priority programs for a country that is concerned about the health care of its citizens.

On the other hand, what we have before the Members in our reconciliation package is a balanced approach containing half revenues and containing half cuts.

The Michel approach wipes out virtually all of the revenues in the package pending before the House. We have presented a balanced approach that protects those programs that are important to the health of this country.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to respond to the comments of both the gentlewoman from California and the gentleman from Texas with respect to the effect of my amendment.

Neither of those comments have any basis in fact.

The second paragraph of my amendment reads:

REPORT BY COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATION.—(1) Before the close of the fifth calendar day beginning after the date of enactment of this section and except to the extent provided by paragraph (2), the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives shall subdivide among its subcommittees the allocation of discretionary budget authority and corresponding budget outlays for fiscal year 1988 allocated to it by House Report 100-201 as reduced by subsection (a).

What this does is frankly, calls for a freeze of last year's level of spending, discretionary accounts period, not line items.

What it calls upon is the Committee on Appropriations, and under a new allocation of 302(b) allocations, to go back and rework the figures and bring up figures that conform with this year's level of total spending, not by individual line items.

They still can exercise their authority, and that is the way to make real savings. In the absence of that, we are piling on additional spending at the very time when every Member says we ought to be cutting. We are not cutting. We are freezing at this year's level of spending.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I would like to say that I have great respect for the gentleman's opinion. I just disagree with the gentleman, because what is going to happen is, we are going to have cancer versus AIDS versus TB versus hemophiliacs, and that is what we are doing.

We need that funding for health. We do not want to pit one against the other.

Mr. MICHEL. The subcommittees have already made some determination with respect to priorities.

In the AIDS area alone, I remember when I had NIH under my jurisdication in HEW. We are now up to nearly $900 million.

If I were on that subcommittee today, I would still be keeping that figure level and reducing something else without that priority, and that is exactly what would happen under the terms of my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I think a lot has been said about the Michel amendment. The thing that all of the Members care about is a downpayment on the deficit and sending a signal.

The Michel amendment, if the Members vote for it, is going to do about $18.5 billion, and still does not hit $23 billion, which is the minimum to avoid sequestration.

That is not going to be the right signal. In terms of equity, it has been pointed out that a freeze as constructed in this amendment will require some very negative things in choices with regard to high-priority areas, like FAA operation, compensatory education, AIDS research, VA medical care which I know none of the Members want, but that is what is there.

There is some question clearly as we debated today about the baseline not being equitable, and that most of the reductions will come out of the domestic, very little out of the Pentagon side.

Finally, in conclusion, let me say that I am sorry to hear the Members bring out that old issue that we sort of trot out when everything else fails; and that is pay raise, pay raise, pay raise.

Mr. Speaker, every Member here knows that we fight that pay raise issue on appropriations bills; and therefore, we do not need to get diverted.

I would simply say to the Members that the issue here is whether or not the Members want an equitable package that achieves the target, or do the Members want a package that misses the target by over $4 billion, and thus we will have sequestration?

☐ 1905

Did you want a package that says to the appropriators, "Here is your ceiling, it is your determination, appropriators, what to do and how to distribute it because your committee has had thousands of hearings, and is knowledgeable of what the priorities ought to be, whether we ought to cut FAA or whether we ought to cut highways; whether we ought to cut education, or whether we ought to cut transportation." Whereas, in the Michel amendment, that choice, that latitude for the appropriators is not there.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would simply urge a no vote on the Michel substitute. It does not reach the target, it is not equitable, and it is not fair.

In conclusion I would say to my colleagues, let us show some leadership and vote for the proposal that puts us on a course to avoid sequestration with a real $23 billion of deficit reduction.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to rise in opposition to the substitute amendment offered by my good friend BOB MICHEL. I do so for the same reason that I opposed any reconciliation package at this time: Because it would undermine what we are trying to accomplish at the economic summit conference. It is important for us to keep all options open for reducing the deficit—and some of the measures which are encompassed by the Michel substitute are included among those options. As I said on the floor earlier today, everything save Social Security is on the table. To preclude any of our options by premature action will serve neither the economy nor the people, both of which it is our duty to preserve. The sine qua non of budget reduction is that Congress and the President come to a mutually agreeable plan. In the first and last analysis, this is the only way to avoid sequestration. The change in the economy has brought a corresponding change in the political climate, and the congressional agenda should reflect that change. I must oppose the amendment, and ask that we take the practical approach by working through the summit conference.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Michel amendment. I have long believed that we should not increase taxes until we have implemented a cap on spending. The Michel amendment puts such a cap in place by freezing fiscal year 1988 appropriations at the fiscal year 1987 level.

An increase in taxes without a cap on spending merely leads to more spending. I regret that H.R. 3545 relies far too heavily on revenue increases and far too little on spending reductions for me to be able to support it.

If the Michel amendment is not adopted, I will be forced to vote against this budget reconciliation legislation. While I support deficit reduction, I do not believe that this is the best way to do it. I am hopeful that the budget summit between the President and congressional leaders will lead to a deficit reduction plan which I can support. One which will be acceptable to the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in the event that the Michel amendment is defeated, must the next vote be a 15-minute vote? Can it be reduced to 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The answer to the question is no, it cannot be reduced to 5 minutes.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—ayes 182, noes 229, not voting 22, as follows:

□ 1930

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Gephardt for, with Mr. Kemp against.

Mr. Fazio for, with Mr. Thomas of California against.

Mr. Traficant for, with Mr. Courter against.

Mr. Gray of Illinois for, with Mr. Young of Alaska against.

Mr. Waxman for, with Mr. Spence against.

Mr. CHAPMAN changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. Are there other Members in the Chamber who desire to vote?

If there are other Members who desire to vote we will accommodate their vote.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recorded as voting "aye."

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. We are proceeding under regular order. The Chair has been advised that there are Members on the way who desire to vote. The Chair will accommodate their wishes.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recorded as voting "aye."

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recorded as voting "aye."

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce that there is no procedure for Members to ask how they are recorded. They may look and see.

The Chair had been advised that there were other Members en route to the Chamber. If there are no other Members who desire to vote, are there any Members in the Chamber who desire to change their votes?

If there are no other Members in the Chamber who desire to vote or to change their votes, all time has expired.

If there are no other Members in the Chamber who desire to vote, or if there are no other Members who desire to change their vote, on this vote the yeas are 206.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire of the Parliamentarian and the Chair, once the Speaker has said the vote is closed and all time has expired, and that is on the tape, we have it on the video tape, once that has been done how can it be reopened?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it always has been the disposition of the Chair and of every occupant of which the present occupant is aware to permit any Member who is in the Chamber to vote or change his vote so long as he desires to do so and is in the Chamber. The Chair had been advised that there were other Members en route and therefore the Chair was holding open and still holds open, if Members wish to change their votes or other Members wish to vote.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, is it my understanding and I want to make sure that on our side of the aisle we heard the Speaker correctly, that the Speaker has offered to hold open the vote until those Members who have not yet voted but who wish to vote are recorded or may change their vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will respond to the gentleman's inquiry. It has been the policy——

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I do not have order and I cannot quite hear the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

The Chair will respond to the gentleman's inquiry. It always has been to this occupant of the chair's knowledge a policy of the Chair to honor the desire of any Member in the Chamber to vote or to change his vote and if no other Members desire to vote or to change their votes all time has expired. On this vote the yeas are 206, the nays are 205.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry. If it is a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I do have a parliamentary inquiry. I would say the Speaker did not answer the last one. We understand what you have stated as the policy of the Chair.

But as a parliamentary matter, after the Chair has said, "All time has expired," which the Chair did, can you then reopen the vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will respond. On more than one occasion, the present occupant of the chair and in the Chair's observation other occupants in the chair have permitted Members to vote so long as those Members are in the Chamber and obviously desiring to cast a vote. That is the policy of the Chair.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask if any Member desires to vote or desires to change his vote? And if not all time has expired.

□ 1955

The yeas are 206, and the nays are 205. The bill is passed. Without objection, a motion to reconsider is laid on the table.

REQUEST FOR GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous material on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, so ordered.

The Chair lays before the House——

Mr. WALKER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FRENZEL. There was an objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, the House is not in order. We cannot hear.

The SPEAKER. Was there an objection?

Mr. FRENZEL. There was an objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand. The request was that Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks.

Was that request objected to?

Mr. WALKER. Yes; I objected, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found a truly enrolled joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.J. Res. 309. Joint resolution providing support for the Civic Achievement Award Program in honor of the Office of Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged motion which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DONNELLY). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. WALKER moves that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

☐ 2015

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DONNELLY). All time has expired.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, you have now announced that all time has expired. I am quite familiar with the policy of this Chair. Under the rules of the House could the Parliamentarian instruct us whether under the rules at this point additional votes may be cast now that the Chair has announced that time has expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that if the Chair sees a Member in the Chamber, the Chair will allow that Member to vote.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I understand the policy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman have an additional parliamentary inquiry or point of order?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am not asking a policy inquiry. I want to know the rules of the House of Representatives. After you have announced that all time has expired, may additional votes be cast or votes be changed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rules of the House state that the rollcall will be open for a minimum of 15 minutes, and that beyond that it is at the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I thank the Chair, that is all I wanted, was an answer to the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thanks the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mrs. BOXER changed her vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. FRENZEL changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until Friday, October 30, 1987, at 10 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

REINSTATING FAVORABLE TREATMENT OF CAPITAL GAINS: KEEPING THE LIFEBLOOD OF THE U.S. ECONOMY FLOWING

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 has nullified the many positive actions taken since 1978 to reduce the rate of taxation for capital gains. Despite the lessons of history and the indications of recent studies, Congress has again arbitrarily raised the maximum rate from 20 to 28 percent. Not only will the increased rate discourage investment, but it will also reduce the future revenues collected from the tax. A review of the history of the capital gains tax will show that a cut in the rate has always increased revenue. Recent economic studies also indicate that this will be true in the future. It is evident that the revenue-maximizing rate is about 15 percent so I have introduced appropriate legislation. H.R. 3353 sets the rate of taxation of capital gains at 15 percent.

Capital gains are those gains resulting from the sale of capital assets, such as stocks, bonds and real estate. Until passage of the Tax Reform Act, long-term capital gain (long-term gain was that resulting from the sale of a capital asset held for longer than 6 months), was entitled to preferential tax treatment. In general, 60 percent of the long-term capital gain was excluded from tax. The highest effective tax rate on a long-term capital gain was, therefore, 20 percent (40 percent of the long-term gain subject to tax times the highest marginal tax rate, 50 percent).

In the early 1970's, Congress doubled the maximum tax rate on capital gains from 25 to 49 percent. The motivation for this dramatic increase was ostensibly to increase tax revenues, but these high capital gains tax rates caused those years to be some of the most unproductive in recent history in terms of capital investment and small business growth. Many businessmen and high-technology innovators still refer to those years as the "dog days of the entrepreneur." The venture or risk capital needed to begin and finance the growth of new corporations virtually disappeared. A period of economic stagnation ensued, and many corporations went under, went deeply into debt, or in the case of many new high technology companies, were forced to sell or license their products to foreign corporations.

Mr. Ed Zschau, a Congressman from the State of California who retired his seat at the end of the 99th Congress, was a young enterpreneur just starting out in "Silicon Valley" at this time, who somehow managed to survive this difficult period. As he related over 2 years ago to the New York Times:

> In the early 1970's when my company was first getting off the ground, venture capital sources had pretty much dried up. What I did, and what many other companies had to do, was to seek capital from foreign companies. But in order to get the money, we had to sell licenses or technology or go into joint ventures. Unfortunately, we sold a lot of our good stuff off.

Something is wrong when American genius, American ingenuity and American entrepreneurial skills are being leased or sold to our foreign competitors for lack of venture capital to finance their development.

Then, in 1978, behind the leadership of the late Congressman Bill Steiger, Congress acted to reduce the capital gains tax rates from 49 to 28 percent. The results were astonishing, even to those who had proposed the reduction: Within a mere 18 months, more than $1 billion of new venture capital poured into funds for investment in new and growing companies. With a further reduction to 20 percent in 1981, the United States experienced a virtual explosion of investment and capital formation. This "explosion" has resulted in over 1 million new jobs since 1978, and contrary to the predictions of many, has actually increased captial gains tax revenues. In 1979, the first year of the Steiger tax cut, the Treasury Department collected $11.7 billion in capital gains tax revenues, up from $8.1 billion collected in 1977 and $9.3 billion collected in 1978. So much for the expected decline in revenues.

Most experts agree that the Tax Reform Act of 1986 will have devastating effects on the formation of capital and will undoubtedly result in a marked capital gains tax revenue loss over the next few years. Harvard Professor Lawrence Lindsey has simulated the revenue impact of the 1986 Tax Reform legislation and the proposed 15 percent rate as opposed to the past rate. For the 3 fiscal years from 1988 to 1990 the 1986 Tax Reform rate would result in a projected loss of $31.7 billion whereas the 15 percent rate would result in a projected gain of $14.8 billion. This is not an isolated instance; five other recent studies have indicated that the optimum capital gains rate lies between 9 and 21 percent. If the Tax Reform Act of 1986 is not amended, capital will become more expensive and our productivity, innovation and economic growth will therefore be reduced. As a result, Federal tax revenues will be diminished as proven both by economists and by history.

Furthermore, the 1986 reform will have the effect of dramatically increasing the capital gains taxation for lower and middle income taxpayers who were never subject to a maximum capital gains rate of 20 percent, even under the law in effect before this reform. Take, for example, a retired individual who holds stock as a portion of his security for his retirement. This individual must often sell his stock holdings to provide income on which to live. Under the law in effect prior to passage of this tax reform, however, the entire amount of the gain realized on the sale of these capital assets will be subject to taxation as ordinary income. For a person on a fixed income, struggling to make ends meet, the difference between these two amounts can be critical.

Also suprising to those who believe that a cut in capital gains tax is solely to the benefit of the wealthy are Dr. Martin Feldstein's findings on the origin of the revenue gain from the proposed 15 percent tax. Taxpayers with gross incomes of $100,000 and above would account for over 80 percent of the increased revenue and those with gross incomes of over $200,000 would account for over 50 percent. Thus, a cut in the tax will raise greater revenue from the wealthy who trade at their own convenience, while a hike in the tax will hurt the needy and the elderly who must realize their gains when they need the money.

When the rate of taxation of capital gains is cut, the wealthy willingly pay more taxes because the tax on capital gains is characterized by a voluntary nature of payment. The payment is voluntary because the asset need not be sold and the gain realized if the rate of taxation is deemed to be too high by the investor. A higher rate discourages the sale of capital assets in an attempt to avoid realizing the capital gain. By this mechanism the investor is locked into investments and the capital market is diminished. Because the investor chooses not to realize gains the Government receives less revenue at the higher rate. When the rate is reduced the market is stimulated and more gains are realized, yielding greater revenues from their taxation.

The fact that investors change their behavior in response to changes in the tax law requires a dynamic analysis of revenue estimates. Many of the studies cited by the opposition are static estimates that do not account for the change in behavior of the taxpayer. A dynamic analysis of the rate indicates that a cut in the rate will again raise the total revenue.

It is essential that we restore preferential capital gains tax treatment to a maximum rate of 15 percent. By enacting this legislation Congress can help to maintain a favorable atmosphere for economic growth and encourage sensible innovative risk-taking. Capital formation costs must remain cheaper at home than abroad so we will not force entrepreneurs to seek financing abroad to develop and implement their innovations. In addition to increasing revenue through enhanced investment, the reduced rate will create more jobs and thereby also raise more revenue. This legislation puts a challenge before Congress to correct one of its great blunders of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, last week the House passed H.R. 162, the High Risk Occupational Disease Notification and Prevention Act of 1987. I was proud to support this important piece of legislation.

Each year in Texas, an estimated 4,000 to 5,700 people die from occupational disease, costing Texans $461 million to $630 million every year. These estimates do not include the many Texans who are disabled each year due to work-related illnesses such as asbestosis, silicosis, pesticide poisoning, lead poisoning, and various cancers. These numbers are truly alarming, and they reflect a growing inability to reduce workplace disease hazards, despite considerable attention and effort on behalf of industry, State legislatures, and Congress.

Because of the magnitude of this problem in our State, the Texas State Legislature has consistently risen to the occasion, addressing the problem in a highly progressive manner. The Texas Hazard Communication Act, passed by the legislature in 1985, far outpaced OSHA's Hazard Communication Standard, requiring the mandatory coverage of both manufacturing and nonmanufacturing employees. OSHA will not cover nonmanufacturing employees until May 20, 1988, a significant time lag behind Texas law, which has covered nonmanufacturing employees since 1985.

This Texas bill overwhelmingly passed the State legislature, with strong support from all areas of business in the State. It is fair to say that Texas has been a leader on the issue of occupational hazard notification legislation, reflecting the desire on the part of Texas business and citizens to have progressive, innovative solutions to this problem. Thus, it is my belief that the majority of Texans, as evidenced by the businesses in my district which support H.R. 162, want Texas to continue to make progress in this area.

One question now arises for the Congress: How can we best assist our constituents, our taxpaying workers and businesses, in reducing these staggering human and monetary costs? H.R. 162, with its medical monitoring requirements, provides a possible solution—early detection, a step which may prevent deaths and reduce the severity of illnesses resulting from occupational diseases. This bill is preventive medicine in legislative form. Our intent in this bill is to save lives and prevent unnecessary health costs for individuals, corporations, and the Government.

H.R. 162 is supported by such respected health organizations such as the American Cancer Society, the American Lung Association, and the American Medical Association. In addition, numerous chemical companies in my district have voiced support of H.R. 162, including Air Products, Atlantic Richfield, Celanese, Diamond Shamrock, Dupont, W.R. Grace, Hercules, ICI Americus, Lonza, Lubrizol, National Distillers, PPG, Rohm and Haas, Union Carbide, and Upjohn. The bill also has wide support among nonchemical businesses, including IBM, Atlantic Richfield, General Electric, Eastman Kodak, Digital Equipment, and Crum & Forester Insurance.

Workers have the fundamental "right to know" not simply that the substances they handle at work are hazardous, but also what health hazards those substances may pose. Thus, although I certainly applaud the recent expansion of OSHA's Hazard Communication Standard, and the progressive, rigorous Texas Hazard Communication Act, these laws are silent on the question of medical monitoring and disease notification—which is the very heart of H.R. 162.

The bill that has been crafted, with the addition of some important amendments, is a bill we can all be proud of. We have successfully tightened the bill, by adding amendments which would: exempt small businesses with fewer than 50 employees from the job transfer provisions; exempt companies with exceptional health and safety programs from the notification requirements; exempt from job transfer provisions agricultural employees who work for an employer for fewer than 6 months in a calendar year; require that an employee show physiological signs of disease before medical removal is required; and permit the Risk Assessment Board to waive notification for persons whose exposure, based upon the latency period, would have already resulted in a specific disease.

I hope that the long-term effect of H.R. 162 will be a reduction in the human tragedy of occupational disease and the staggering economic costs associated with such disease. We must all put on our farsighted glasses and realize that early notification and medical monitoring of high-risk employees is a preventative step which government and industry must take to achieve long-term benefits.

ELEVATE THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION TO A CABINET LEVEL DEPARTMENT

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my sincere appreciation to the chairman of the Government Operations Committee, Congressman BROOKS from Texas, for conducing hearings earlier this week on legislation to elevate the Veterans' Administration to a Cabinet level department. A bill to accomplish this has been introduced in every Congress for the past 25 years. However, thanks to the work of Congressman BROOKS, this goal is within reach.

My very good friend, the chairman of the House Veterans's Affairs Committee, SONNY MONTGOMERY, should also receive credit for his work on the bill. Without his support we would never have been able to obtain so many cosponsors on the bill. My friends and colleagues from New York, Mr. HORTON, the ranking member of the Government Operations Committee, should also be commended for his contributions.

I believe that the team of BROOKS, MONTGOMERY, HORTON, and SOLOMON now pushing this legislation insures its prompt approval in the House.

I would be remiss if I failed to recognize the leadership role played by all of the veterans' service organizations in this effort. The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans, AMVETS, paralyzed Veterans of America, Blinded Veterans Association, Vietnam Veterans of America and many others have worked tirelessly in order to gain approval of this legislation. Few other major veterans' issues have had such united and overwhelming support. I would urge my colleagues in the House to make certain they are now cosponsoring H.R. 3471, elevating the VA to a Cabinet level department, for this is the bill currently under consideration by the Governmental Operations Committee.

Mr. speaker, I wish to submit for the RECORD a recent editorial from an upstate New York newspaper, the Dunkirk Observer, which makes some excellent points as to why the VA should be elevated to a Cabinet level department.

[From the Dunkirk (NY) Observer, Sept. 20, 1987]

ADD VA TO CABINET

Congress currently is studying a proposal which would establish the Veterans Administration (VA) as a cabinet-level agency.

This plan, which we strongly endorse, would elevate the chief of the VA from the position of administrator to the level of a secretary in the President's cabinet. Our millions of veterans of the Armed Services deserve to have their concerns represented in the cabinet—the highest level of the executive branch.

The VA administers the largest health care system in the free world. The VA has over 172 hospitals, 229 out-patient clinics and 117 nursing homes. Its annual operating budget of more than $27 billion is larger than most cabinet-level agencies such as the Departments of State, Interior, Labor, Education, Transportation, Justice, Energy and Housing and Development.

The VA ranks second only to the Department of Defense in the number of employees.

Over the years, the VA has proven itself to be a viable, hard-working agency, which has provided many types of assistance to our veterans. Through the GI Bill programs, thousands of veterans have been able to purchase homes or pursue educational or vocational opportunities.

Did you realize that the VA also is the largest trainer of health care manpower in the United States? Nearly half of the doctors in the U.S. have received all or part of their training through the VA. Most American families at some time have received medical attention from VA-trained health care personnel.

Which agency administers the largest vocational rehabilitation and training programs in the U.S.? The VA, of course. These programs have led to job opportunities for our disabled veterans.

Because of its dedication to our veterans, the VA will continue its mission with or without cabinet-level status.

However, we call upon Congress to recognize the fine work being done by the VA and show its appreciation and gratitude by adding the agency to the list of those already represented in the hierarchy in Washington.

GENERATIONS AT RISK IN A CHANGING HEALTH ENVIRONMENT: THE 1987 CONGRESSIONAL BLACK CAUCUS HEALTH BRAINTRUST WORKSHOP

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, during the Congressional Black Caucus [CBC] Annual Legislative Weekend I convened the Health Braintrust Workshop, which has been a major impetus in advancing the direction of health care in black and minority communities. Over the years, this forum has provided a much-needed and sought-after exchange for black health care professionals in their fight to improve the health status of black America.

This year's workshop, entitled "Generations at Risk in a Changing Health Environment," focused on many critical health issues confronting the black community. Noted agency officials, and representatives of medicine and academia addressed the Health Braintrust on such timely topics as "Black Indigent Health Care," "AIDS and the Black Community," "Cultural Influences on Health," and "Minorities in the Health Professions and Biomedical Research."

Mr. Speaker, I have chaired the CBC Health Braintrust since its inception 10 years ago. In all the years, this was one of the most provocative and educational sessions ever. Over the next few weeks, I will be submitting a series of statements presented during this meeting to share with my colleagues. I am sure that everyone who reads these articles will find them to be a comprehensive perspective on the status of health of blacks in America.

BLACK INDIGENT HEALTH CARE AND CHILDREN

(Presented by Kay Johnson, Senior Health Specialist, Children's Defense Fund)

Every child needs decent health care at ever stage of her development. Good medical care must begin with comprehensive maternity care provided to a child's mother during her pregnancy, labor, and delivery. It continues throughout childhood, with care for a child's preventive, acute, and chronic health care needs. It is crucial in the teenage years to protect a youth's overall health, to promote his or her mental health, and to prevent teen pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases.

No pregnant woman should be denied maternity care because she does not have the money to pay for it. No child—whether his or her need is for immunization's, treatment for a strep throat, dental care, hospitalization, medicines, eyeglasses, speech therapy necessary because of a hearing loss, or long-term care at home—should go without health care because his or her family cannot afford it. No teen should have to forgo counseling or services needed to prevent permature sexual activity or pregnancy.

The provision of health care to children is important for several reasons: (1) because it is both an ethical and moral social obligation, (2) because many pediatric health interventions are known to be both effective and cost-effective, and (3) because investing in our children is investing in our own futures.

Of the four and five year olds in today's America, the potential students and workers in the year 2000:

One in four is poor;

One in three is nonwhite or Hispanic, of whom two in five are poor;

One in five is at risk of becoming a teen parent;

One in six has no health insurance;

One in two has a mother working outside the home, less than half of whom receive quality child care; and

One in seven is at risk of dropping out of school.

We cannot afford to ignore these facts. No nation can dare to write off a significant portion of its human assets.

A principal challenge of the next decade is the protection of American children from want and neglect. We must begin with a national commitment to ensure that every child has basic health, nutrition, and early childhood services and thus has the capacity and opportunity to learn well and to develop strong basic academic skills. Today, not all children have such basics, and health care is a prime example of our failure to invest in early preventive care.

Preventive care during all stages of a child's life pays off in improved health as well as in financial savings to society. Early and continuous maternity care can reduce mortality and low birthweight among infants by more than 25 percent. Comprehensive health care for children after birth saves lives and helps prevent unnecessary pain and suffering. It also averts or minimizes long term health problems, helping children grow into healthy, productive adults.

WHAT HEALTH RISKS DO POOR AND MINORITY CHILDREN FACE?

Unfortunately, not all children have equal—or equitable—access to health care. This is especially true for low income children whose families are often without health insurance and the means to pay for health care services out-of-pocket. Black and minority children are disproportionately likely to have low income and are thus disproportionately likely be uninsured.

For children under 18, black children are four times more likely to live in poverty than whites.

Between 1979 and 1985 the percentage of black children living in poverty grew by 6 percent.

The risk of being uninsured is significantly higher for blacks than it is for whites. An estimated 25 percent of black adults and 25 percent of black children (under age 18) are uninsured, as compared to 15 percent of white adults and 17 percent of white children.

Lack of health insurance, particularly when combined with poverty, generally leads to inadequate access to health care services. For low income and minority children, this pattern has been well documented.

Poor, Hispanic, and black children are more likely than their nonpoor and white counterparts to have no regular source of health care.

Black children are more likely to be born to a woman who received inadequate prenatal care. In 1985, only 62 percent of black mothers, as compared to 79 percent of white mothers, giving birth that year received care in the critical first three months of pregnancy. Similarly, black pregnant women were twice as likely to receive no care or none before the seventh month of pregnancy (10 percent vs. 5 percent).

Children younger than two years old are a particularly vulnerable population. Yet, while the American Academy of Pediatric recommends no fewer than nine health examinations in the first two years of life, 10 percent of poor and black children do not see a physician at all during a year.

Nearly one-third of all children under age 17 has never visited a dentist. Among black children this problem is even more serious. For example, 46 percent of white children have a dental visit before age 5, as compared to only 28 percent of black children.

Moreover, key indicators of child health point to a worsening in health status in recent years.

The nation's rate of progress in overall infant mortality, which had been slowing since 1981, has ground to a halt. According to the most recent data from the National Center for Health Statistics, there was no statistically significant change between the 1984 and the 1985 national infant mortality rate.

Black infants continue to die at a rate twice that of white infants. The black-white infant mortality gap is approximately the same as it was in 1960 (a ratio of 1.93:1).

Low birthweight birth (birth weighing less than 5.5 pounds) is the single largest cause of infant mortality and a major cause of disability. Between 1984 and 1985, there was an actual increase in the percentage of babies born at low birthweight (6.7 to 6.8 percent). Furthermore, the racial differential remains substantial, with 5.6 percent of all white infants and to 12.4 percent of all black infants born at low birthweight in 1985.

Birth to a young mother also places a child at greater health and developmental risk. By 1984, the birth rate for black teens ages 15-17 reached its lowest point since 1970, only to rise slightly in 1985. In 1985, the birth rate among black teens age 14 years and younger also rose.

Black and minority children face startlingly greater risk for HIV virus infection and for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS). Among AIDS patients who were children (<15 years) 58 percent were black and 22 percent were Hispanic. Similarly, while blacks account for 11 percent of the population over age 15, they account for 25 percent of the adult AIDS population. Even more startling is the fact that because the majority of the women with AIDS are minority women, 90 percent of the children born with AIDS have been black or Hispanic.

Thus recent statistics reveal that black children continue to suffer disproportionately from poverty and the consequences of poverty. They are as a result more likely to be born at risk of death and disability, to suffer from preventable health related problems, and to lack adequate health care to offset their increased health risks.

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

In an effort to offset these trends, advocates have launched efforts to expand state and federal level health programs for low income families. Many of these efforts have met success in recent years. At least 25 states, for example, have appropriated state dollars to provide maternity care to low income women since 1984. Thirteen states (Alaska, Arizona, Indiana, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, and Washington State) now supplement the federal Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children (WIC) program with state resources.

On the federal level, Congress has made sweeping changes in the Medicaid program (a public insurance program for selected groups of low income persons) to permit—and sometimes mandate—states to cover additional groups of pregnant women and children. These include:

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (DEFRA) which mandated state Medicaid coverage for all children under age 5 (including children in two-parent families) whose families' incomes and resources met the states' AFDC financial eligibility test;

The Consolidated Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (COBRA) which extended Medicaid coverage to all pregnant women with family incomes below AFDC eligibility levels; and

The Sixth Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (SOBRA), which provides states the option of extending Medicaid to pregnant women and children under age five (on a year-by-year, phased-in basis) with family incomes up to the federal poverty level. As of August, 1987, 24 states had raised income eligibility standards for pregnant women and children under age 1, as permitted under SOBRA.

In addition to the Medicaid reforms outlined above, Congress is considering other proposals to further improve children's and pregnant women's access to health services. These include:

Medicaid Infant Mortality Amendments, which would: permit states to raise the Medidaid income eligibility level up to 185% of poverty for infants and pregnant women; allow states to cover children under age 5 all at once without having to phase-in their coverage over time and cover all children up to age 8 with family incomes and below the poverty level; and mandate state coverage of all children up to age 8 living below AFDC eligibility levels.

Increases in funding levels for the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant and Community and Migrant Health Centers programs; and,

Legislation to provide Medicaid coverage to all low income uninsured families on an income adjusted premium basis to the near poor and without cost to poor families. Legislation is also pending to require employers to furnish employees with health insurance.

The nation's success in improving the health status of black and minority children depends greatly on its willingness to make a commitment to reduce child and family poverty. For example, investments in public health programs initiated during the 1960s made a significant contribution to lowering our infant mortality rate. Similar preventive investments in today's children will be necessary if we are to ensure them a life of good health and opportunity, if we are to stop the cycle of poverty.

Our future is at stake. Young people between the ages of 16 and 24 comprised 27 percent of the working age population in 1978. By 1995 the young worker group will be only 18 percent of Americans of working age. These young people may come to adulthood prepared for employment, family life, and success or they may reach adulthood crippled by years of poverty, neglect, and ill health. What we do now, how we act on what we know, can make the difference.

The Prevention of Mental and Emotional Dysfunction in Poor Black Children

(Presented by Frederick C. Green, M.D., Emeritus Professor of Child Health and Development, The George Washington University, School of Medicine)

I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this workshop on Black Indigent Health Care as part of the 17th Annual Congressional Black Caucus Legislative Weekend.

My specific assignment is to address the question of how we can protect the mental and emotional well being of poor Black children or to prevent the development of significant mental or emotional dysfunction while growing to maturity in our society.

As a pediatrician, my concern encompasses the whole child, the integrity of his or hers life space, the quality of parenting received and the status of his or hers physical, social, emotional and intellectual well being. In essence, all factors that impinge on the childs well being. Within this context, good health is much more than the absence of disease but is a positive concept indicating the total physical, social, mental and emotional well-being of the individual. It is my belief that in our Black communities, such a holistic view is imperative for all of our child care providers. The needs and problems of children cannot be fragmented and met in a piecemeal fashion. Problems do not exist in a developmental vacuum. Health problems beget school problems begets behavioral problems and so on.

Parenthetically, I believe that the critical needs of children are: (1) to be wanted, loved and valued; (2) to have parents and care givers who are both competent and caring; (3) to have a community or society that places a high priority on their needs; and (4) for them to develop in a safe and nurturing environment, free from bigotry and intolerance. I suggest that these are goals towards which we should aspire for all of our children.

In my opinion, one of the most serious problems facing our society today is the developmental damage incurred by children being reared under unwholesome and adverse ecologic circumstances. The reality of today is that within the ranks of the 5 million Black poor children, we have too many growing up in incubators of psycho-social pathology: namely, slums, welfare hotels, shelters for the homeless, on the streets, all of this in a sea of violence and social deviance.

Further, rich or poor, all Black children being reared in this society are at significant risk for impaired psycho-social development due to the constant impact of racism on all aspects of their development, particularly as they begin to function in the larger society.

However, to be poor and black is to be in double jeopardy, making psycho-social damage almost inevitable. Whitney Young in his last book, Beyond Racism noted that too many Black children are programmed for failure from the time of their birth due to the impact of poverty, racism, disease, ignorance (poor schools). I would like to paraphrase him and suggest that the programming really begins at conception due to the noxious developmental impairing influences that can now contaminate the intrauterine environment: namely, drugs, tobacco, alcohol, infections to name a few.

Frankly, it would be easy for me to take the time allotted to me and devote it to reciting the dreary litany of what is wrong with Black kids, their families and their communities. However, that is precisely what I do not want to do since that is the deficit model approach taken by most academic child developmentalists, social scientists and program planners as they carried out their endless studies on this accessible population. The rush to always find out what is wrong and apply a quick fix rather than searching for the strengths and enhancing them as suggested by Billingsly and Hill in their book "The Strength of Black Families". Clinical judgement can become so distorted and blurred by ones preoccupation with searching for deficits that one forgets the biologic truism of the compensitory capability of living organisms, e.g., the heightened sense of hearing and touch of the blind. Therefore, it behooves those who are making judgements on the developmental progress of children to carefully look beyond the areas of developmental delay and areas of strength will often be found. I believe that this simple action can prevent significant psychological dysfunction by relieving the preoccupation with the identified deficits.

As the parent, the pediatrician and the teacher observes, analyzes and makes judgements on when and how to intervene in the developmental continuum, he or she has a profound effect on the degree to which an individuals developmental potential will be realized. In essence, the health status of an adult is a function of the manner in which problems are perceived by care providers during those critical formative years.

If problems and needs of children are only narrowly perceived as health deficits that may or may not be improved by intervention, then the results are predictable, an individual has not achieved his/her full potential. However, if problems are perceived in the broader perspective of identifying and enhancing human assets, as well as correcting human deficits, the outcome will be much improved.

I do not believe that any discussion of preventing mental and/or emotional damage to children is complete without some comments on the labeling or mislabeling of children and its negative developmental impact. Certainly this topic of labeling is particularly timely at this time, given the devastating stigmatizing consequences of identifying a young child as being a victim of AIDS.

A few years ago (1974), with the late Dr. Nicholas Hobbs of Vanderbilt University, I participated in a study that culminated in a book entitled "The Futures of Children". This study concerned the inappropriate labeling of children. Through this study and my own clinical observations I began to understand the far reaching and often devastating consequences that could occur.

One of the banes of my existence as a practioner was the common concept of a child having a "touch" of something like polio, heart disease, often started by a health provider who really had no idea of what was happening to the child.

Many children have "innocent" heart murmurs—a kind of sound made by the heart as it beats. Although some murmurs mean heart disease, "innocent" murmurs have no pathologic significance. Occasionally, a parent is told simply that the child has a heart murmur without further explanation resulting in a frightened parent who begins to limit the childs' physical activity because of his "bad heart". Thus a cardiac cripple is needlessly developed with all of the emotional dysfunction that entails simply because no one really explained the problem to the parent.

I dread to think of how many children, particularly poor children are mislabelled in school as being "mentally dull", educably mentally retarded, disruptive or other similar conditions often because they could neither see the blackboard or hear the teacher. Uncorrected correctable physical deficits is a major cause of educational dysfunction in our inner city schools. A major reason for the development of the EPSDT component of the Medicaid program was the unacceptably high numbers of children, particularly poor children, in school with uncorrected correctable physical deficits.

Finally, let me return to the topic of AIDS and the labelling of children. This is a disease of critical import—to the Black community since the majority of reported cases in children are Black and frequently poor, although social class is not a major determinant since the diseases that require frequent transfusions are not limited to a specific social class.

If there is any question as to the potential of labeling for causing mental or emotional harm, one needs only to look at the highly publicized experience of those three little Ray children in Florida who, after they were identified being HIV positive, were subjected to terrible trauma in their attempts to return to school. Finally, the family was forced to leave town after their house was burned to the ground. I would suggest that people in other communities not feel to smug because the same thing could happen in any community, particulary if community residents have not been properly educated regarding the disease and clearly defined and generally understood policies regarding school attendance have not been developed.

In summary, being a Black and poor child in our society carries a major risk for psychosocial damage. In response to the original question of preventing mental and emotional harm to poor Black children, I believe that the nature of racism in our present society precludes a major diminution of damage due to racism. The ultimate answer is the elimination of poverty, racism, ignorance and bad schools, and disease. Obviously, the above goals are not going to be achieved in the near future; progress can be made by assuring that there will be the systematic provision of developmentally appropriate services for the poor children at significant risk. Our poor Black children, like all other children need: (1) parents and care givers that are both competent and caring; (2) they need services that will effectively meet their nurturing needs; and (3) they need a concerned community that will place the priority of mothers, infants and children at the very top.

A PARENT'S GREATEST FEAR: THE CONSUMER PRODUCT SAFETY COMMISSION

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, parents should be able to go to bed at night secure in knowing that the product in which their child is sleeping is safe. But, as revealed in this week's hearing in the Subcommittee on Consumer Protection, at which I testified, parents have good reason to fear. The agency responsible for protecting consumers, and especially children, from unsafe products is racked by severe mismanagement.

Products that have long proven deadly to children remain on the market because the Consumer Product Safety Commission has refused or delayed action. Baby cribs, all-terrain vehicles, bunk beds, lawn darts, and pool covers are the most blatant hazards facing children today. My statement before the subcommittee discusses the threat to children.

I urge the House to support H.R. 3343, the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act, to make vital reforms in the operation of the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

My statement follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. GEORGE MILLER ON THE CONSUMER PRODUCT SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1987

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before this Subcommittee in support of legislation to restructure and reauthorize the operation of the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

The bill we are considering today is a testament to Chairman Florio and the Subcommittee's tireless efforts on behalf of consumers. I want to address its impact on children in light of the Consumer Product Safety Commission's deplorable record in recent years.

The case of Danny Lineweaver in my district puts into clear focus the failure of the Commission to protect even infants. Danny Lineweaver was found by his parents hanging from his crib cornerpost almost five years ago.

Today, at age five, he is permanently disabled as a direct result of the accident. An industry standard was agreed to just two years ago, but it is voluntary and does not fully address the hazard. It allows the production of cribs with cornerposts on which children can still hang themselves, and children continue to be killed and injured in this way.

I am proud that my constituents have formed the Lineweaver Foundation to bring attention to this issue, to warn parents of the dangers of infant cribs, and to provide information on who to call if an accident occurs. Members of the Foundation are dismayed at the Commission's failure in this area. They have commissioned with Temple University to study the threat posed by the current crib cornerpost standard, and I anxiously await the results.

The Consumer Safety Improvement Act corrects many of the weaknesses in our Nation's consumer safety law. Fifteen years ago, the Consumer Product Safety Commission was established to protect the consumer from dangerous products, to aid them in evaluating product safety, to establish uniform safety standards, and to help investigate ways to prevent product-related injuries.

Fifteen years later, there is a crisis in consumer confidence, and a special danger to children, the most vulnerable of consumers. Too often, when it comes to taking decisive action against a product that endangers young people, Americans get delay, deferral, and an abdication of authority.

All Americans, but especially our Nation's children, suffer.

A great many of the products that make it to supermarket shelves or to toy stores are used by children who do not discover the dangers until it is too late.

Lawn darts have injured over 6,000 people in eight years, the great majority of them under age 15, but compliance has been virtually non-existent. The Commission recently found that in 21 of 22 cases, manufacturers had not complied with regulations. All-terrain vehicles, used largely by youths, have been killing 20 people and injuring 7,000 each month, but no standard, either voluntary or mandatory, has yet been developed.

One hundred twenty-five children under age five die each year in accidents involving cigarette lighters, and the Commission's own staff has acknowledged that the current voluntary standard is inadequate to protect these children. But as of yet no regulatory action has been taken. I am very pleased that these three product hazards are specifically addressed in this reform measure.

There are several other children's products that present serious dangers because of the do-nothing policy adopted by this Commission.

A 6-year-old constituent of mine is permanently disabled because he almost drowned under a pool cover. At least twenty-six deaths have occured from similar accidents, but today there is still no standard to address the danger of pool covers.

No standard—other than a weak industry guideline—has been issued to address the dangers of bunk beds, even though 23 deaths have resulted and injuries have increased dramatically. A cancer-causing agent has been reduced in baby pacifiers by the Food and Drug Administration, but the Commission allows a higher and dangerous level. I hope to work with you, Mr. Chairman, and the Subcommittee to address my concerns in these areas.

The Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, which I chair, has investigated the issue of child protection. The unmistakable conclusion we made is that failure to take reasonable steps to protect children is extremely expensive for the U.S. taxpayer and the country as a whole. That failure by the Commission in just four of the above areas costs an estimated $1 billion each year in lawsuits, medical bills, and lost lives and work. Accidents on all-terrain vehicles were estimated to cost as much as a staggering $2.8 billion in 1985.

The Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act would make the Chairman more responsive to the Commission as a whole, establish important guidelines for developing meaningful voluntary standards, and mandate greater state and local involvement in enforcement efforts. By taking these steps, we insist that the Commission live up to the madate it was given in 1972.

This bill will save American families and their children a lot of money, but more important, it will save us pain, sorrow, and unnecessary deaths and injuries from preventable accidents.

TOTAL EDUCATION AWARENESS WEEK

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to designate the week beginning September 11, 1988, as "Total Education Awareness Week."

Many of you may ask, "just what does he mean by total education?" It is a good question and is exactly what I hope many others will be prompted to ask as the result of this bill.

Our Nation's children are our most precious asset. Their education is among the most important responsibilities of the States and of the people of the United States. Thus we must ensure that the total needs of children—intellectual, psychological, social, and physical—are met in school. Lack of attention to any of these needs may result in the harmful deterioration of their bodies and their minds.

As Federal legislators we must take the initiative in encouraging State and local governments and local educational agencies to provide programs that help children improve self-understanding and self-control to help prevent emotional disturbance. We must see that they are addressed in a caring and consistent manner leading to a positive direction of development.

It has been established that the addition of human service professionals to the educational team has proved to be a valuable support for children, their parents, and teachers. The unique and pivotal roles that schools can play in the early intervention and teaming of effort on behalf of children must be recognized.

Schools in the United States have traditionally been more than just institutions of scholarship. I urge my colleagues to join me in my effort to acknowledge the critical role that schools can play in the total education of children and to increase awareness of and attention to this very important concept.

A TRIBUTE TO BRIAN ROSBOROUGH

HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY II

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of my constituents, Brian Rosborough, and his organization, Earthwatch. On September 30, 1987, Mr. Rosborough was given the Conservation Service Award by Donald Hodel, Secretary of the Interior. The Conservation Service Award is one of the two highest awards that the Secretary of the Interior can give to a private citizen or group for indirect service to the Department of the Interior.

Brian Rosborough is president and publisher of Earthwatch, an international research institution based in Watertown, MA. Under his direction, Earthwatch helped the Fish and Wildlife Service to protect the endangered sea turtles nesting on Caribbean beaches. Earthwatch secured volunteers to defend and to study nesting leatherback sea turtles. For the last 5 years, these volunteers have policed the beaches at Sandy Point and Culebra National Wildlife Refuges every night of the nesting season. Their actions saved hundreds of nests from erosion and poaching, and in turn 40,000 additional hatchlings made it to the sea. For these efforts, Mr. Rosborough received the Conservation Service Award.

In addition to his work on behalf of sea turtles, Mr. Rosborough has organized expeditions to more than 70 countries in support of the sciences and humanities, and he has led scientific explorations in China, Zaire, Mauritania, Iceland, and Australia. He has also been very active in the field of education, where he has been a leader in the areas of minority career education, high school teaching, development of science curriculum, and training gifted students.

I am honored to bring Brian Rosborough's accomplishments to the attention of my colleagues. For his work to protect the endangered sea turtles and for his work in science, education, and the humanities, I salute Brian Rosborough.

INDIA URGES SWIFT BHOPAL SETTLEMENT

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, 3 years after the tragedy in Bhopal, India, I am pleased to see the Indian Government moving to settle its legal dispute with the Union Carbide Corp. over compensation for victims of the gas leak. As in so many other instances, protracted litigation only enriches trial lawyers and does not grant needed relief to victims.

Since it describes very well the progress being made in this matter, I commend the following article from the New York Times of October 28, 1987, to my colleagues.

INDIA URGES SWIFT BHOPAL SETTLEMENT

(By Sanjoy Hazarika)

NEW DELHI, Oct. 27.—The Indian Government has authorized its attorney general to settle swiftly its bitter legal dispute with the Union Carbide Corporation over compensation for victims of the 1984 gas leak at Carbide's chemical plant in Bhopal, India, a Cabinet official said today.

"Except for perhaps the lawyers who made lots of money through it, a protracted legal battle was not in the best interests of anybody—not the victims, not the Government." said the minister, referring to the two-year legal battle waged here and in the United States.

More than 2,500 persons died in the tragedy, regarded as the world's worst industrial disaster, and tens of thousands continue to suffer serious health problems.

The latest moves for an out-of-court settlement began about two months ago after District Judge A.N. Deo, in Bhopal urged both sides to reach a settlement. He set an Oct. 30 deadline for the two sides to try to reach an agreement.

DISCUSSIONS STILL CONTINUING

However, Government and company sources said discussions were still continuing on the terms and it was unlikely that an agreement would be reached by the end of this week.

Both sides have refused to divulge details of the possible settlement but a compensation figure of more than $500 million is reportedly being discussed. In a lawsuit, the Indian Government had sought $3.3 billion from Union Carbide.

"A settlement will have to be endorsed politically" by a special Cabinet committee headed by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, and the cabinet minister, who asked not to be identified. But the minister indicated that the Government was prepared to face political opposition and press through a deal, which is currently being negotiated by Attorney General K. Parasran, who has been handling the case since 1985.

An independent source said India had renewed a demand for $615 million in the latest round of negotiations. It had sought this amount in 1985, when the first negotiations began. Carbide had offered $300 million, payable over a number of years, and said it would ask its board of directors to raise that amount by $50 million. But India had rejected the offer as inadequate.

In contrast to the hostility that marked earlier negotiations, sources close to Carbide said the current round have taken place in a positive atmosphere.

Union Carbide, which is based in Danbury, Conn., would neither confirm nor deny the reports from India.

"If what the Indian Government says is true, then its quite encouraging," said Robert M. Berzok, Union Carbide's director of corporate communications. He said the company could not comment further on the negotiations.

But sources close to the company said yesterday that Carbide officials have told the Indian Government that it would be willing to make major concessions to reach a settlement by the end of the month. The sources declined to elaborate on the concessions.

The negotiations are said to have produced progress on the following issues:

Definition and identification of actual victims. Officials on both sides say there has been large-scale fraud in the filing of compensation claims. There are more than 520,000 demands for compensation, while the total number of those treated at hospitals at the time of the disaster was about 200,000.

Compensation. The two sides have agreed on classifying surviving victims into three injury categories; mild, serious and life-long impairments. Individual victims would be compensated according to a flat rate that is being worked out for their respective groups. However, the two sides have not yet worked out a timetable or formula for distributing the money.

Health costs. The company has apparently agreed to pay the substantial costs of continuing medical care and to compensate the Indian Government for the approximately $50 million it has spent since December 1984, providing food, medicine and other assistance to victims.

The settlement is also expected to cover the damage suffered by businesses in the area.

LOCAL HEROISM

HON. ROBERT E. BADHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Speaker, the police who make our cities safe face many challenges. When we look for heros, we often look for men in faraway places who perform amazing feats. But, in Newport Beach, CA we need only look to the nearest police officer.

It is my privilege today to tell my colleagues about the feats of a few of Newport Beach's heros.

Officer Mark Everton will receive the Newport Beach Police Department Medal of Valor on Wednesday, November 4. On August 27, Officer Everton arrived on the scene of an accident seconds after it occurred. He rushed to a burning, overturned car and managed to save all three occupants from what otherwise could have been a fiery death.

Five other officers will receive the Award of Merit. Lt. Timothy Riley and Officer William Barnett charged into the Newport Back Bay on October 28, 1986, and pulled out a woman who was thrown from her car into the mud and water. Officer Robert Oakley, a police helicopter pilot, landed his aircraft in a dark field following a collision with another police helicopter during a pursuit, despite the loss of all power and severe damage to the craft, saving his own life and the life of an officer riding with him. Officer Stan Bressler has been an adviser to the Police Explorer Program since 1970 and has shaped the future of law enforcement by introducing hundreds of young people to the career. Reserve Officer Jan Paul Anderson has brought innovation to the department by using his video equipment, which allows prosecutors to make stronger cases and put more criminals in jail.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honor to represent such men. It is my belief that the Newport Beach Police Department is one of the finest in the Nation and I'm sure my colleagues join me in commending Medal of Valor recipient Everton and the five Award of Merit recipients for a job well done.

SALVADORAN TERROR

HON. TOM SAWYER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 26, Herbert Anaya was shot and killed in El Salvador. Mr. Anaya was the president of the nongovernmental Human Rights Commission which is involved in documenting human rights abuses in El Salvador. His murder should serve as a reminder that despite improvements in human rights in El Salvador, all is not well there.

The killing of Herbert Anaya makes clear the lengths to which some in El Salvador will go to prevent peace and reconciliation in this war torn country. Obviously, the murder of Mr. Anaya was meant to upset the unsteady political balance that exists in El Salvador as President Duarte and members of the political opposition sit down to negotiate in accordance with the Arias peace plan. We must not let these people undermine the courageous effort that is underway.

I have circulated a letter, to be sent to Secretary of State Shultz, which urges the State Department to use the leverage we enjoy as a consequence of our military aid to El Salvador to facilitate a full and impartial investigation of the circumstances surrounding the killing of Herbert Anaya. This is a perfect opportunity to use our influence constructively, as a force for change, in El Salvador. I urge all of my colleagues to join with me in asking Secretary Shultz to press for an investigation of the tragic murder of Herbert Anaya.

A nationally respected newspaper, the Akron Beacon Journal, printed an editorial entitled "Salvadoran Terror" which talks about the Anaya killing. I think it highlights some of the important issues which the death of Mr. Anaya raise for all policymakers.

[From the Akron Beacon Journal, Oct. 28, 1987]

The killing of Herbert Ernesto Anaya, the president of the Salvadoran human rights commission, is a tragic reminder of the violence that ravages El Salvador.

The Reagan administration often touts El Salvador as a Central American success story, a place where democracy has bloomed despite enormous obstacles. And indisputably, Salvadorans have courageously backed democratic rule. But the reality of politics there dictates that the military is the most powerful player in the government.

Unfortunately, the military and other security forces frequently have little patience for democracy's openness and invitation to dissent. While as yet no one has claimed responsibility for the Anaya shooting, the incident is frighteningly reminiscent of the right-wing death squads that have terrorized El Salvador over the last decade. Obviously, such brutality remains part of Salvadoran life.

The shooting reflects a country at war and rules ultimately by the gun. It underscores the challenge before those, including President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica, seeking to implement a regional peace plan for Central America. The plan calls for cooperation, compromise and a commitment to democratic rule. Sadly, the death of Herbert Anaya suggests nothing but contempt for those goals of reconciliation.

THE NATIONAL SPACE GRANT COLLEGE PROGRAM

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to expand on a provision incorporated in both the NASA authorization and the HUD and independent agencies appropriation bill which will greatly assist NASA in its efforts to revitalize this country's space program.

In 1863, as Americans pressed across this continent, the Land Grant Act was passed to establish universities to explore new agricultural and engineering technologies to better use the vast resources of our expanding Nation. Today I feel we are ready to apply the same concept to our drive to the space frontier.

The National Space Grant College Program, incorporated into the above mentioned legislations will enhance the abilities of institutions of higher education, government, and private industry to develop our capabilities through collaboration and cooperation in space-related activities.

Facing strong challenges to our role in space development from the Soviets, the Europeans, and the Japanese, we must take innovative steps to assure our Nation's role in space and realize its rich potential.

It is time to press our programs of education into developing the potential of space. Molded in the same form as the Land Grant Act, the Space Grant College Program will support the establishment of space grant programs at our Nation's universities, space grant fellowships for our promising researchers, and regional consortia between business and academia to pursue research and development efforts in space technology and commercialization.

Administered by NASA, the program would award grants on a competitive basis to universities, graduate researchers, and consortia. The program would be funded with $10 million in fiscal 1988 and 1989 and would complement NASA's ongoing research expenditures.

The program will give important impetus to space research and to the diffusion of knowledge. Just as the land grant colleges spread across the country to support our development of this continent, so too the space grant colleges and fellowships will foster our drive to the new frontier of space.

HUMAN RIGHTS LEGISLATION RELATING TO TIBET

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation requesting the President to consider the human rights atrocities inflicted against the Tibetan people by the Government of the People's Republic of China in the future conduct of our relations with the PRC. I urge my colleagues in the House to join me in sponsoring this important human rights legislation.

Mr. Speaker, on October first of this year Chinese police in Tibet fired upon several thousand unarmed Tibetan demonstrators, including hundreds of women, children and Tibetan Buddist monks, killing at least six and wounding many others.

My legislation requires any notification submitted to the Congress pursuant to the Arms Control Act with respect to the sale of any defense articles to the People's Republic of China shall be accompanied by a Presidential determination that the Government of PRC is acting in good faith and in a timely manner to resolve human rights issues in Tibet.

The measure also requires that not later than 60 days after the date of enactment that the Secretary of State shall submit a report to the Congress on the human rights situation in Tibet and the transfer of millions of Chinese to Tibet.

Mr. Speaker, when the foreign aid authorization bill reaches the floor of the House of Representatives, I will offer this legislation in the form of an amendment to H.R. 3100.

MR. MOM: A MAN OF THE 1980's

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, we have all seen many innovative examples of how parents have coped with a multitude of child care needs. From day care to education, there have been a variety of solutions to address these needs. I would like to spotlight one particular parent who devised a most ingenious solution to a very common problem.

Dr. Alfred Godson, a physician in Washington, DC, and his wife Amy are the proud parents of a 7-month-old daughter, Erin. Like many parents of their generation, Alfred and Amy have decided to share many of the responsibilities concerning their daughter's day-to-day needs. However, Alfred was unable to fulfill one special need that he knew from all the medical literature was important to infant bonding—breast-feeding.

This spurned the creation of the Baby Bonder, Alfred Goldson's patent-pending invention that allows men to experience the special intimacy associated with nursing babies. The Baby Bonder is based on the findings of the famous Harlow monkey experiments, where baby monkeys were much more likely to respond to terry-cloth "mother" monkeys with bottles for breasts than wire-mesh "mothers." And little Erin Goldson has been quite taken with her father's invention.

Mr. Speaker, Alfred Goldson should be commended not only for his creativity, but for his determination to be a full and active part of his child's life. At a time when our Nation's families are faced with many insurmountable crises, his efforts are refreshing and encouraging. I would like to share with you an article on the Goldsons and the Baby Bonder featured in a recent Washington Post magazine article. His motivation is proof to us all that, when we put our minds to it, we can accomplish anything.

MR. MOM FINALLY GETS IT ALL

What more could Alfred L. Goldson want? He is a personable, accomplished man, married 13 years to an attorney, Amy Robertson Goldson. They have a lovely house with a swimming pool and Jacuzzi, and they drive high-performance automobiles. A 1972 graduate of Howard University Medical School and now chairman of Howard University Hospital's Department of Radiotherapy, Goldson is famous in his field of cancer research. And to top off his good fortune, on St. Patrick's Day he and his wife had a beautiful baby girl, who is named, appropriately, Erin Nicole Goldson.

Sounds like Goldson has everything, right? But Goldson didn't feel that way. The birth of his daughter made him instantly aware that he was missing one thing. Or actually two things. Breasts. Sure his wife had them, and she intended to nurse the baby, but he didn't and couldn't. And that was the problem.

He knew from the medical literature how important infant bonding is, how crucial breast-feeding is to that bonding, and he was jealous.

"We were discussing how fathers interact with kids," Goldson remembers, "and I told my wife that I was going to be very active, but she said, 'You can do a lot, but you still can't nurse the baby!' It was like a friendly competition," he says with a laugh. "I had to come up with an idea how I was going to nurse, or pseudo-nurse, this baby."

Thus was born what is now called the Baby Bonder (other more ribald names were considered but discarded). This patent-pending invention of Goldson's is a terry cloth and fleece bib with fake breasts. Any adult, with baby bottle in hand, can just put on the bib and insert the bottle from the inside through the nipple openings on the bib itself. Voila! A father can almost breastfeed.

Goldson was familiar with experiments done with monkeys by Harry F. Harlow of the University of Wisconsin. Harlow put one group of baby monkeys in cages with wire-mesh "mother" monkeys that had baby bottles for breasts; the other group he put in cages with wire-mesh "mother" monkeys that were wrapped with a soft terry cloth. The researchers, says Goldson, found that monkeys were much more likely to cling to the terry-cloth mothers than to the plain wire-mesh mothers. "So I used the terry cloth and added more than wire mesh. I added myself, a warm body, eye contact and a deep voice. I felt," Goldson adds good-naturedly, "that this would be the beginning of a quantum leap in bonding with my baby."

According to Goldson, little Erin Nicole took to the Baby Bonder right away, providing him with a tangible feeling of intimacy with the baby, his busy spouse with time for her career and the baby with what is likely a first—a nursing father.

Goldson is waiting for approval of his patent application and searching for a manufacturer for the Baby Bonder. He'd like to keep the price affordable, and though he invented it for left-out fathers, he sees it as just as useful for non-nursing mothers, grandparents, friends and relatives. On a six-month sabbatical from Howard, he's due back October 1. He's already wondering how he'll wean Erin.

TEEN PREGNANCIES DECLINE: NOW WHAT?

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times is reporting good news and bad news about teenage pregnancy and parenthood this month. Last week, the Centers for Disease Control reported that, during this decade, the rate of teenage pregnancy and parenthood are down. This reaffirms that sex education, school clinics, and other community-based prevention programs aimed at delaying teenage sexual activity and encouraging contraceptive use for sexually active teens are working.

The bad news is that the United States still lags far behind other developed nations in its commitment to effective programs and its willingness to face the realities head-on. Despite our most recent success, the United States rates of teenage pregnancy and childbearing, especially among the youngest teens, are still significantly higher than in the Netherlands, Sweden, France, Canada, England, and Wales.

We should listen to what teens tell us they need. Just yesterday, at a meeting of the New Jersey Governors' Task Force on Adolescent Pregnancy, dozens of teenagers pleaded for more school-based programs to help them make more informed and responsible decisions.

The administration's response has been to turn a deaf ear. Rather than building on the important success we've had in the 1980's in reducing teenage pregnancy and childbearing, the administration would undermine the very programs responsible for the success. For example, last month, the administration proposed regulations to limit the scope and restrict the range of services provided by the title X family planning program. More than one-third of the clients using title X family planning clinics are women under age 20.

I urge my colleagues to make note of today's New York Times editorial which poses the challenge, "Teen Pregnancies Decline. Now What?" We can follow the administration's policies to subvert successful efforts, or we can make a real commitment to solving the problems of teenage pregnancy by supporting those programs that make a difference. I suggest we have no choice but to follow the latter.

TEEN PREGNANCIES DECLINE. NOW WHAT?

Finally, teen-age pregnancies are starting to fall, according to new Federal figures. They vindicate calls—repeated at hearings in New Jersey yesterday—for greater efforts by parents, schools, youth programs and health centers to encourage delayed sexual activity and birth controls. Such figures are the strongest evidence yet for vigorous expansion of such programs.

Despite the turnover, the United States retains an ignominious distinction. It leads nearly all other developed nations in teen-age pregnancy, abortion and child-bearing rates. Furthermore, the most vulnerable adsolescents—girls under 15—account for most of the difference between the American teen-age birthrate and that of other countries.

Not all teen-agers would necessarily take advantage of better access to contraception. To girls trapped in poverty, a baby may seem the only possible acquisition; their foremost needs are counseling, schooling and the prospect of jobs.

But there are many young Americans who most assuredly don't want to get pregnant. New Jersey teen-agers testifying yesterday pleaded for more guidance in managing their sexuality. In New York City, about two-thirds of the 15,000 youngsters who become pregnant each year undergo abortions. It's a fair bet that with better contraceptive counseling, most would not have had to do so.

In the Netherlands, Sweden, France, Canada, England and Wales the fertility and abortion rates for teen-agers are lower than those in the United States, even though the median age at first intercourse is roughly the same. The difference is that too much of America still treats contraception as a dirty secret. The dirtier secret is the reluctance to prepare children for life in a changed world.

BOY SCOUTS RECEIVE EAGLE AWARD

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, Sunday, November 8, 1987, will be remembered as a very special day in the lives of two young men from my district. Brett D. Shamory and Mark E. Kuhns, both of Middleburg, PA, will receive Boy Scouts' most coveted honor—the Eagle Award—before family and friends at Emmanuel Lutheran Church, Middleburg.

Both young men have received numerous awards and merit badges as they worked their way up through Scouting while holding various leadership positions. Mark Kuhns, son of Donald and Lila Kuhns, began Scouting at the age of 8 when he joined Cub Pack 3415. Three years later, he became a member of Scout Troop 415. He attended the National Scout Jamboree as a council contingent troop member in 1981, and again in 1985.

Mark is a member of Emmanuel Lutheran Church in Middleburg, and is a 1987 graduate of Middleburg High School. He participated in the theater, was a member of the baseball team, and was the golf team's MVP in his senior year.

For his Eagle project, Mark recorded data from the tombstones in Hassinger's Brick Church and the Wayside Bible Church cemeteries. This information was placed on computer disks, organized, and printed in a way to benefit the Snyder County Historical Society. The printout may be used to aid in locating burial sites and to obtain information on ancestors buried there.

Brett Shamory, son of Lee and Diane Shamory, joined Webelos den of Pact 3415 in 1980. In June 1981, he also joined Troop 415. Brett is a member of Paxtonville United Methodist Church. He is a senior at Middleburg High School and is active in soccer, basketball, baseball, the varsity club, and his school's National Honor Society.

Brett's Eagle project consisted of the computerized organization, compiling, and printing of the names and relationships of those persons buried in the Paxtonville Cemetery. This data will benefit the community, the cemetery association, and the Snyder County Historical Society.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues in the U.S. Congress to join me in extending congratulations to Brett Shamory and Mark Kuhns for earning this worthy and special award. They have made their Congressman very proud. I wish them great success in their future endeavors.

POLES HONOR WWII CREW OF THE 390TH

HON. GERRY SIKORSKI

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to insert into the RECORD an article honoring the World War II crew of the 390th Bomb Group. This article appeared in the Albuquerque Journal and the Mississippi Daily Journal.

On September 18, 1944, a B-17 carrying supplies for Polish partisans fighting the Nazis in the Warsaw uprising was gunned down 6 miles north of Warsaw. There were 10 United States airmen on board; two survived the crash. On September 21, 1986, a monument honoring those 10 crew members was unveiled in Lomianki, Poland. This monument is believed to be the first for American soldiers that has been erected on Polish soil.

This gesture, which came as a result of a 5-year fight for the monument, is a testimony not only to those Americans who died in World War II, but to the increasing Polish-American bond. It is an honor for both American and Poles, and is reflective of our longstanding friendship with the Polish community.

CREW OF THE 390TH HONORED

LOMIANKI, POLAND—Villagers who witnessed the crash of an American warplane shot down by German artillery during World War II have fulfilled what they felt was an obligation and erected a monument to honor the crew. The 9-foot-tall stone memorial, believed to be the first in Poland for American soldiers, was erected after a five-year campaign. "They were young Americans trying to save our Poland," said Stanislaw Niegodziscz who lives about 200 yards from the crash site, six miles south of Warsaw. "We want all of America to know what they did," he said. The B-17 nicknamed "Til We Meet Again," was shot down Sept. 18, 1944, with 10 U.S. airmen on board. Two of them survived—Sgt. Marcus L. Shook and Sgt. James D. Christy. The plane was one of 107 American aircraft dropping supplies that day for Polish partisans fighting the Nazis in the Warsaw uprising. About 220,000 Poles were killed during the 63 day battle.

On 21 Sept. 1986, the monument was unveiled in a ceremony attended by villagers and veterans group. The names of the ten crew members were inscribed on a brass plaque. Killed in the crash were Lt. Francis Akins of Derry, PA (pilot), Lt. Forrest D. Shaw of Exeter, NH (co-pilot); Lt. Ely Berenson of New Jersey, (navigator); Lt. Myron S. Merrill of New Jersey, (bombardier); Sgt. Frank de Cillis of New Jersey; Sgt. George A. MacPhee of Mass.; Sgt. Walter P. Shimshock of Minneapolis, Minn.; and Sgt. Paul F. Haney of West Virginia.

Marcus Shook now resides in Belmont, MS and is a regular attendee at the 390th Bomb Group Veterans Association reunions. Shook is the only remaining survivor as Christy died in 1949. His recollection of the bailout was that at least three of the crew got out, and as soon as they cleared the aircraft "the thing exploded." Witnesses from the village recently have disclosed that one of the crewmen was shot and killed by the Germans as he drifted in his parachute. Shook says that would explain the fate of the third crewman that he thought excaped. Shook himself was fired on while in the parachute: he is quoted as saying: "I was first hit in the leg. Then I realized they were shooting at me, and I drew myself up into a ball to make a smaller target. After a little bit, my legs started dangling again and another bullet hit me in the ankle. That was a compound fracture." First he was taken to field headquarters where he was questioned. Then he went to a field hospital where both legs were put in casts. After about a week, he was finally moved to a prisoner of war hospital on Poland's western border with Germany. He stayed there until January of 1945, when the Russians broke through German lines and liberated the camp.

Shook also tells us that the crew was going to nickname the B-17 "I'll Be Seeing You," however it got lost somewhere in the Polish translation.

JOHN E. DU PONT, CHAMPION OF AMERICA'S CITIZEN ATHLETES

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize John du Pont, a gentleman who has made a tremendous contribution to the efforts of American athletes preparing to represent our Nation in international competition.

To John du Pont citizenship is not just a right, it is a trust. As one of America's most ardent citizens, he has championed the cause of liberty at home and throughout the world alike. But nowhere has his sense of purpose been stronger than with America's young athletes.

He has been a pentathlete competing in United States and international meets in 14 nations for more than 20 years, including twice being named a U.S. Olympic coach. Known as the Father of the Triathlon, John du Pont has dedicated his life to teaching and training amateur athletes in sports and in citizenship.

He is the founder of Team Foxcatcher, headquartered at its Olympic training facility at the Du Pont farm in Newtown Square, PA. His athletes have represented the United States in countries on six continents in swimming, wrestling, triathlon, track, gymnastics, and modern pentathlon. All of his teams have produced world champions and Olympic medal winners.

John du Pont is also the founder of the Delaware Museum of Natural History and, among his many accomplishments, is presently head wrestling coach at Villanova University. He has served with distinction as a citizen volunteer to law enforcement for over 20 years.

Mr. Du Pont has now announced the founding of the Foundation for America's Citizen-Athletes.

Mr. Du Pont today said:

> The Foundation's goal is to help young athletes of distinction become citizens of distinction. As we all know, America's young athletes serve as role models for their peers, and many become the heroes of tomorrow's youth. With drug abuse so prevalent today, America's young athletes must be examples of good citizenship. We are in hopes that this Foundation will allow them to take an even more active role in America's future.
> When our American athletes compete internationally, they are competing against many who are funded by their governments," Mr. Du Pont continued. "Here in America, in our democratic society, the responsibility to help our young athletes lies in the commitment of individual citizens. I believe Americans should do all they can to help our young athletes excel in all facets of their lives.

Each year the foundation will sponsor weeklong workshops in Washington, DC, where young citizen-athletes will meet with officials in U.S. Government and business. Citizen-athletes will be selected on the basis of athletic talent, academic achievement, and citizenship.

Their objective is "to help America's athletes be good citizens for today, and for tomorrow."

I hope every Member of this body will take note of the foundation's activities and do everything possible to support it.

BARTHOLDI PARK

HON. PETER W. RODINO JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago, the Nation joined in a gala celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the anniversary of the Statue of Liberty.

At the same time, there was a smaller gathering here in Washington to pay homage to the genius behind the Statue of Liberty—Frederic Auguste Bartholdi. With the official dedication of Frederic Bartholdi Park in 1986, we established a lasting tribute in the nation's capital to this great friend of America and the designer of one of our most important national symbols.

Bartholdi Park, located on a triangular parcel of Capitol grounds near the Rayburn Building, is distinguished by a large, beautiful fountain that was designed by Frederic Bartholdi and sent to the United States by the French Government for exhibition at the Centennial Exposition in 1876.

The fountain proudly stood in the esplanade at the main entrance to the exposition and dominated the most important vista in the fair grounds. The official guidebook directed visitors to a "large bronze fountain, with statues of the twin godesses of cities" which had the unique distinction of being simply designated "Bartholdi's Fountain." Construction of iron, bronzed and lavishly decorated, the fountain was praised for its concept and beauty.

After the Centennial Exposition closed, the U.S. Government purchased the fountain and it was placed in the old Botanic Gardens in Washington where it stood for 50 years. When the Botanic Gardens where relocated to the bottom of Capitol Hill in 1927, the fountain was dismantled and placed in storage until it was reerected in its present location. Without any marker or sign to indicate its historic and artistic importance, the fountain was a forgotten monument.

In 1985, I wrote to my good friend Chairman FRANK ANNUNZIO suggesting that Congress designate the fountain's site as Bartholdi Park to honor the creator of the Statue of Liberty. With Chairman ANNUNZIO's leadership, the Joint Committee on the Library, which oversees the Botanic Gardens, adopted this proposal and the first major renovation of the fountain was begun.

On October 30, 1986, Members of Congress and the French Minister of Culture, Francois Leotard, joined together in a ceremony dedicating Bartholdi Park and rededicating his restored fountain. In just 1 year, Bartholdi Park and Fountain have joined the ranks of recognized and beloved monuments in Washington. Now, both tourists and local residents, lunchtime visitors and students of history, know that they are standing before a very special artistic and historic link with the genius of Frederic Auguste Bartholdi.

LABEL IMPROVEMENT PROCESS

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is about to begin enforcement of a new regulation that might well cause some farmers to lose their crop and that might easily lead to a drop in property value for certain farmlands.

Despite these potential setbacks for the farming community, the EPA apparently has no intention of submitting this regulation for public review or comment, or for any other normal regulatory procedure.

By allocating to itself an additional legislative interpretation of the Endangered Species Act, and by calling this new regulation simply part of a "label improvement process," the EPA is apparently intent on legislating brand new requirements on how, where and when farmers may use pesticides.

Mr. Speaker, the issue at this point is not whether the regulation is appropriate, but why in this instance the Congress and the American people have been excluded from their rightful place in the legislative process.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Environmental Protection Agency to rescind its actions to date on this regulation and to open this proposed "label improvement process" to full review and comment by the American people, particularly America's farmers.

THE TWIN DEFICITS: BUDGET AND TRADE

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, the recent crisis on Wall Street has finally brought the message home to the Congress that action must be taken to reduce both the budget deficit and the trade deficit. Unfortunately, the temptations in Congress—to raise taxes and to enact protectionist trade legislation—send exactly the wrong signal to the world economy. Further, the facts tell us that these proposals will not resolve the problem of the twin deficits.

To deal with the Federal deficit, the Democratic leadership has presented this House with but one proposal—to tax. The historic relationship between tax increases and economic downturns should stop all talk of raising taxes at this time. Supporters of a tax increase of $14.3 billion the first year and $59 billion over 3 years wrongly claim that the 1981 tax cut has resulted in lower tax revenues. They fail to see that because of increases in Social Security and other taxes since that time, the average taxpayer is paying more taxes today than in 1981.

Further, the taxes proposed in the Democrats' budget reconciliation bill are not dedicated to deficit reduction. The revenues provide either tax breaks for special interests or ways to fund the Democrats' policy of tax and spend.

Unfortunately, the Democrats' tax and spend policies prevent real progress on the deficit. This is nothing new. With the exception of Social Security payments, tax increases have never been applied to deficit reduction, in spite of promises by congressional leaders. Since 1981, Federal revenues have increased by $256 billion, but spending has increased by $326 billion.

If our goal is to learn to live within our means through deficit reduction over a number of years, the simple fact is that we have to cut spending. An across-the-board spending freeze would be one good place to start. For this reason, I will support the Michel amendment to freeze spending at fiscal year 1987 levels.

I am asking for a commitment from this House and from the conferees and the White House that they will achieve spending reductions before resorting to any additional taxes.

Resisting the impulse to raise taxes is crucial to our economy. Equally important, the Congress must resist the impulse to raise protectionist trade barriers.

History has shown us that the Hoover administration's approach of raising the twin barriers of trade and taxes simply did not work.

The bitter lessons of 1929 and the 1930's should have taught us that there is a link between depression and a regressive trade policy.

The prospect of 199 House and Senate conferees adding special interest tidbits to a trade bill, already 1,000 pages long, is enough to scare anyone.

A commitment by congressional Democrats to put the current protectionist trade legislation on permanent hold would do a great deal to improve the mood on Wall Street.

There are no quick fixes. There is no room for political posturing. We all must share the responsibility. We must cut the budget and the trade deficit. But, contrary to the current drumbeat for tax increases and protectionist trade bills, we cannot ignore the lessons of the past—that tax hikes at times of economic uncertainty push markets down, not up, and that protectionist legislation stifles trade.

I do not want to play down the seriousness of the Federal budget deficit, but I do want to call attention to the fact that after the 1929 crash occurred, the United States had trade and budget surpluses.

There are many reasons for the current Wall Street selloff, but we must not forget that the threat of protectionism contained in the trade bill, with its potential for retaliation, is at least as damaging to the confidence of investors as the recurring Federal deficit.

THE PASSING OF A FRIEND

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, on October 26 Bonnie Brady passed away, and those of us who had the pleasure and privilege of knowing her grieve her loss. Bonnie was the wife of Jack Brady, chief of staff of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Bonnie was a kind woman, full of wit and always smiling. I feel most for her family who must now learn to cope with her absence. But I hope that they will be able to find solace in the many rich memories they must have of Bonnie. The world was certainly made richer because of her presence.

I am reminded of a verse from the Book of Ecclesiastes when thinking about Bonnie. I hope that it can provide some small measure of comfort to the Brady family: "A good name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth."

Bonnie Brady certainly possessed a good name, and now I'm sure she is finding peace with her God. Our prayers are with Jack and his family.

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, October 28, 1987, I was in the Chamber and recorded my vote on rollcall No. 382, final passage of the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act. However, the computer has me listed as "not voting" when in fact I voted "yes" on final passage.

H.R. 1393

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, in light of a scheduled markup of H.R. 1393, the CURE legislation, in the Transportation Subcommittee of House Energy and Commerce next Thursday, October 29, I want to call to the attention of my colleagues an excellent Philadelphia Inquirer article on Conrail's recent financial performance and the dire predictions of L. Stanley Crane of more Penn Centrals if H.R. 1393 is passed. "The bill * * * will be the ruin of our industry," Crane said. "If reregulation occurs, a small group of shippers may benefit for a short period of time. But rapidly thereafter, railroads will lose the ability to offer the services and prices that the vast majority of shippers require. I'm afraid we may well face a flow out of captial from the railroad industry * * * and the railroad industry will be driven out of business." Under the Staggers Act average rail rates per ton-mile for all commodities have declined 23 percent in constant dollars between 1980 and 1986. The CURE bill should be rejected.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Oct. 23, 1987]

REGULATION OF RATES IS OPPOSED BY CONRAIL

(By Tom Belden)

NEW YORK.—A worried Conrail chairman L. Stanley Crane asked Wall Street analysts yesterday to help lobby against proposed federal legislation that the industry contends would mean its economic ruin.

At a Conrail-sponsored meeting with rail analysts and at a press briefing afterward, Crane said there seems to be strong support in the House for a bill that would amend the Staggers Act, the major law that deregulated the rail industry.

The amendments, championed primarily by electric utilities, coal-mining interests and grain dealers organized as Consumers United for Rail Equity (CURE), would put controls on some rail shipping rates. The bill is scheduled to be voted on next Thursday by the House Commerce transportation subcommittee.

"The bill . . . will be the ruin of our industry," Crane said. "If reregulation occurs, a small group of shippers may benefit for a short period of time. But rapidly thereafter, railroads will lose the ability to offer the services and prices that the vast majority of shippers require. I'm afraid we may well face a flow out of capital from the railroad industry . . . and the railroads will be driven out of business."

Crane predicted that if the CURE amendments are enacted, there would be a repeat of the early 1970's crisis for rail service in the Northeast that was precipitated by the bankruptcy of the Penn Central Railroad. The collapse of Penn Central forced the federal government to form Conrail in 1976. The railroad became a private-sector company in March.

No one wants to see the Penn Central failures of the 1970s reborn in the 1990s," he said.

Charles N. Marshall, Conrail's senior vice president for marketing and sales, estimated it would take two to five years for the CURE amendments to so undermine the financial condition of railroads that nationalization of the industry might be necessary to maintain service.

"People . . . look at freight rates microscopically and forget that there has to be a railroad industry there to serve the coal industry and the utilities if any of the partners in this operation are to succeed," Marshall said. "The railroads must earn enough on their investment and must keep their tracks fixed if they are to provide a service which is a value to the utilities."

The CURE coalition contends that railroads have used the rate-making freedom gained under the Staggers Act to gouge so-called captive shippers, which are typically coal mines, grain companies or utilities that buy large quantities of coal or grain. The captives are those who have service from only one railroad and who say they have no practical, economic way other than rail to ship their products.

Proponents of the CURE bill contend that rail-shipping rates are fair and reasonable in cases where a railroad faces competition. But the proponents contend that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has responsibility for hearing complaints of railroad rate-gouging, has failed to keep the railroads from charging exorbitant rates in situations where a carrier has a monopoly.

Railroads "have a perfect freedom, a freedom not intended by Congress, to do whatever they want with their shippers," Bob Szabo, CURE's executive director, said in a telephone interview yesterday. "The protections that Congress intended for captive shippers . . . are not working."

Railroads acknowledge that they charge some of their customers more than others to haul different types of freight, based on the amount of competition they face for different commodities. But that is no different from a retailer setting profit margins at different levels for different products, depending on competition, and Congress should not intervene to alter that, Crane said.

"It's perfectly ridiculous to set up that kind of issue in the Congress," he said.

On another issue, Crane told the analysts that Conrail will be well-managed even after his planned retirement by the end of 1988. Crane, 72, has been given much of the credit for leading Conrail to profitability since 1981, after it lost millions of dollars between 1976 and 1980.

CENTRAL AMERICAN QUEST FOR PEACE

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to share with my colleagues an insightful op-ed piece that appeared in the October 18 Los Angeles Times. The article does an excellent job of summarizing why it is in Central America's interest and ours for the Central American peace plan to succeed. The author, Mr. Peter D. Bell, is well qualified in this area; he served for many years with the Ford Foundation in Latin America, was president of the Inter-American Foundation, and is currently co-vice chairman of the Inter-American Dialogue. I would urge my colleagues to give this article their careful consideration.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Oct. 18, 1987]

CENTRAL AMERICAN PRESIDENTS SHOW REAL GRIT IN QUEST

(By Peter D. Bell)

It is now 73 days since the presidents of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and El Salvador agreed to a set of steps for peace in Central America. The agreement caught Washington and much of the world by surprise—as has the energy and grit with which the Central American presidents have been making good on their commitments.

Peace will still elude the region on Nov. 7, the deadline for some major provisions of the agreement. Yet sufficient progress will have been made, not only to assure the effort a longer life but to infuse it with a certain robustness. The awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize last week to the plan's originator, Costa Rica President Oscar Arias Sanchez, is less a recognition of what has been accomplished than a benediction on what is underway.

If signing the Guatemala accord expressed the Central American yearning for peace, the follow-up activities of the respective presidents reflect the limitations of their power. Each party must take initiative to show good will, but none can go too far—with so much at stake—without reciprocal acts. The United States, though not a signatory, could greatly ease the process, but Central Americans are learning that they can proceed without us. This was evident when El Salvador President Jose Napoleon Duarte visited the White House on Wednesday and strongly defended the accord while also stressing friendship for the United States.

Though agreement to the Arias plan was unexpected, it was no accident. It expressed a confluence of events and trends building for many months. First and foremost, the five presidents came to a shared sense of the toll that the Central American conflicts were taking on the entire region. While the burdens of war had fallen most heavily on Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala, they weighed as well on Costa Rica and Honduras, which have reluctantly given sanctuary both to refugees and anti-Sandinista rebels. Since 1981, per capita income in the region had dropped by 26% and, with continuing violence, prospects seemed bleak.

Second, for differing reasons, the presidents of Nicaragua and El Salvador were ready to pursue peace. Daniel Ortega was selected to stand for the Nicaraguan presidency as the compromise candidate—acceptable to other Sandinista factions because he was so unprepossessing. But over the past three years, he and his fellow "moderates" have established their ascendancy. A relaxation of tension is in their interest as well as their country's.

Meanwhile, Duarte's political star had fallen in El Salvador. In pursuing peace, Duarte could appeal to his people's war-weariness and show a measure of independence from the United States. And the Arias plan—by calling for an end to foreign support for insurgent groups and dialogue with unarmed opposition—legitimized the Ortega and Duarte governments and discredited the rebel causes.

Third, never enthusiastic about the U.S.-backed contras, the presidents of countries neighboring Nicaragua had become convinced that the U.S. policy toward the sandinistas was moribund. Most Central Americans believed the contras could not defeat the Sandinistas. And how, power ebbing away, President Reagan seems incapable of sustaining congressional support for the contras.

Finally, the Guatemala agreement signifies Central American independence. Since agreeing on the Arias plan, the Central American presidents have taken steps to implement provisions in advance of the deadline. For example, all the signatories have decided to set up commissions on national reconciliation. In the case of both El Salvador and Guatemala, historic meetings have been held between the governments and armed insurgents.

In Nicaragua, the Sandinistas have named their toughtest critic, Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, to head the reconciliation commission, approved the reopening of the newspaper La Presna and Radio Catolica and permitted the assembly of peaceful opponents. They have also repatriated a key rebel group of Miskito Indians, promoted the previously existing amnesty program and unilaterally declared cease-fire zones in three embattled provinces. Even more promising, Ortega and the commandantes have crisscrossed the country to explain the agreement and campaign for peace. The Sandinistas appear to have gone too far to be engaging simply in propaganda ploys.

If the progress toward peace still falls short of the mark set for Nov. 7, the United States must bear much responsibility. Reagan has offered halfhearted praise for the Guatemala agreement, but also denounced it as "fatally flawed." In fact, the agreement's underlying weakness for the Administration is precisely the foundation for peace. The Central Americans will accept the existence of the Sandinista regime in return for Sandinista guarantees about its behavior at home and in the region.

By now the U.S. Administration's opposition is clear on three basic points:

First, the Central American presidents have gone a long way toward spelling out the criteria and procedures for democratization, but they also set limits on the changes to be expected. Their agreement, for example, mandates "free, pluralistic, and honest elections," while recognizing that they will be held according to the schedules of "present political constitutions." By contrast, Reagan has declared democracy to be the "bottom line"—the point on which there is "no compromise."

Three weeks ago, a White House spokesman suggested that accelerating the Nicaraguan presidential election, scheduled for 1990, might be required for U.S. support of the accord. It is one thing for the Administration to take democratization provisions seriously. It is quite another to use them to oust the Sandinistas. Central Americans realize that Nicaraguan politics, even under the agreement, will take years to become fully democratic.

Second, the agreement is unequivocal in calling for an end to support for insurrectional movements. This applies to any U.S. aid to the contras that is not for returning them to normal life. Central Americans see stopping contra aid as necessary for any real political opening but Reagan refuses to give up the contra bargaining chip, insisting it be retained to guarantee Sandinista compliance.

Third, the agreement gives little attention to measures related to security and arms limitations. In his recent speech to the Organization of American States, Reagan correctly stated that the accord "does not address U.S. security concerns in the region." What he ignored was the expectation among Central Americans that the United States would negotiate security concerns directly with the Soviet Union and Nicaragua. Nicaragua's neighbors view the withdrawal of Soviet and Cuban advisers, reduction of Communist Bloc military assistance and limitation of the size and sophistication of Sandinista armed forces as important to advancing the peace process. But they want U.S. help.

The Sandinistas might yet renege on some key promises; they may feel too threatened by political openings and civil liberties they committed to. We may never know, since the Reagan Administration seems unwilling to put the Arias plan to the test. Until the Administration is ready to consider acceptance of the Sandinista regime's continued existence, there will be nothing to negotiate about with Managua and there will be incentives for the Sandinistas not to comply with the agreement.

A majority in Congress, however, backs the Arias plan. Members cannot compel Reagan to do so—certainly not between now and Nov. 7. But by rebuffing his requests for more contra aid they can at least keep him from dealing a body blow to the peace process.

It is possible that momentum for peace is already sufficiently great and interests sufficiently real that the process will go forward. The word is being circulated by Central Americans to look not to Nov. 7 but to Dec. 5 as the next critical date. That is when the International Commission for Verification and Follow-up will make its initial assessment of compliance. Meanwhile, the Central American presidents, led by their Nobel Price laureate, must use moral suasion on the U.S. Administration to continue their struggle for peace.

STOP EXPLOITING CHILD LABORERS

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, 88 million children between the ages of 11 and 15 are now part of the world's labor force. Child labor is on the rise, and exploitation of children is a world scandal.

Congressman GEORGE MILLER of California, chairman of the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, examines this problem in a scholarly article in the Christian Science Monitor of October 28, 1987.

The article is reprinted below:

STOP EXPLOITING CHILD LABORERS

In June 1970, the United States Fish and Wildlife Served added the whale to its list of endangered species, severely restricting the importation of whale products.

The same step was taken in 1978 to help ensure the survival of the Asian elephant. Since the Endangered Species Act in 1966, similar protection has been granted to rhinos, leopards, wombats, and many other species.

Don't the world's children deserve the same level of protection?

According the the International Labor Organization, 88 million children between the ages of 11 and 15 are now part of the world's labor force. They and millions more younger than 11, work in dismal and dangerous conditions, putting in endless hours and getting virtually nothing in return.

Child labor is on the rise in large part because third-world countries are racing to meet the demand for their products created by Western nations. A Thai government survey revealed that child labor in Thailand increased 30 percent between 1981 and 1983, and evidence suggests the rate has continued to climb in tandem with the Thai export industry. A 1985 United Nations study of Thai industry reports that "manufacturing industries employing a large proportion of child workers are those which expanded very rapidly in the last few years as a result of their export potential."

Child laborers all over the world leave a long trail of profits for company owners, traders, and Western department stores.

The Mocary factory in Morocco can product a carpet for less than $20. When it is sold to Macy's in New York for $166, Mocary executives gain almost $100 in profit. After marking up and selling the rug, labeled "Made in Morocco exclusively for R.J. Macy's," Macy's makes a $282 profit. The broker who arranges these and other transactions makes millions of dollars each year in commissions. The United States imported 10,000 carpets, worth $2.3 million, from Morocco in 1985. Western consumers create the demand for these products, but do nothing to ensure that the world's children are not sacrificed. It's time to use our economic strength to protect the children of the world rather than allow commercial demands to underwrite their enslavement.

When concerns about international exploitation of child labor are raised, we are frequently admonished that we cannot affect labor conditions abroad. We are told we cannot mandate remedies, or that foreign governments won't even respect their own fair-labor laws. Yet by prohibiting the importation of products derived from endangered species, we do attempt to influence the policies of foreign governments.

We should, in effect, add "exploited children" to the list of "endangered species." This is the essence of legislation that I recently introduced in Congress: barring the importation into the US of any item produced in violation of internationally recognized child labor rights.

We are also told that unless these children are allowed to work, they will starve. Such arguments have served to justify exploitation for centuries. Like the slaveholders who justified slavery on the basis that slaves were better off on the plantation, countries that ignore child labor laws say employers hire five-year-olds out of compassion. The truth is that these companies prefer to hire children, rather than some of the millions of unemployed adults, because they can work them long and pay them little. An Indian legal scholar estimates that if child labor was eliminated in his country, 15 million adult jobs would be created.

Stopping child labor requires a national commitment to keeping children out of the workplace. Kenya, an underdeveloped and impoverished nation, is not only more aggressive in enforcing its child labor laws, but has established Africa's first policy of universal education. In many countries, however, the government simply disregards its own child labor laws, as well as minimal international standards for child labor; enforcement of a minimum working age, prohibition of work at night or in hazardous occupations; enforced standards for minimum hours of work, health, and safety; and a ban on compulsory employment. Some governments have encouraged children to enter training programs where, in the absence of any mechanism to prevent exploitation, they are soon working 70 hours a week.

By putting economic pressure on these countries, we can force them to change their child labor practices.

As child labor stunts the mental and physical growth of children, it also stifles a nation's potential for development. Economic progress in the third world will not come by wasting away the most valuable resource for the sake of foreign exchange. Prosperity will be achieved by giving children the opportunity to grow, and allowing them to make a much greater contribution to society as adults.

THE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION REGARDING THE AUTHORITY OF LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS OF THE BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, by request, legislation to clarify and strengthen the authority of law enforcement officers of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, of the Department of the Interior.

The Department of the Interior, through the Acting Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, forwarded draft legislation to the Congress on August 13 of this year. The bill would provide:

Explicit authority for the Secretary of the Interior to authorize law enforcement officers of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to carry firearms and make arrests;

Authority for the Secretary to enter into agreements with Federal, tribal, State, or local governmental agencies for effective enforcement of any Federal or tribal laws in Indian country; and

An increase in the authorized uniform allowance for uniformed BIA law enforcement officers from $125 to $400 a year.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs employs some 503 law enforcement officers, serving on 163 Indian reservations or areas in 23 States. The current authorities for these law enforcement officers do not clearly state the extent of their authorities, as do similar officers in the Department of the Interior and other departments. Without explicit statutory language for the Bureau of Indian Affairs to carry out these law enforcement functions, individual officers may be exposed to lawsuits alleging unauthorized law enforcement actions.

I believe that proper enforcement of the law on Indian reservations requires congressional delineation of law enforcement authorities, and it is my hope that Congress will act on the legislation as soon as possible.

THE MAD, MAD, MAD, MAD WORLD OF ERIC FEDERING

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, "An enterprise, when fairly once begun, should not be left till all that ought is won." Time has not dated Shakespeare's words. Persistence may be the single most important quality when one is trying to accomplish something. Calvin Coolidge, the silent President whose sparse words inspire other notables even today, put it this way: "Nothing can take the place of persistence. Talent will not; nothing is more common than unsuccessful men with talent. Genius will not; unrewarded genius is almost a proverb. Education will not; the world is full of derelicts."

And he should know. But time has not dated his words, either.

It is my pleasure to know a man, tenacious in the extreme, who has spent the last 5 years in a search against great odds. He is Eric Federing. His quest is for 39 minutes of footage cut from the 1963 cinerama comedy classic "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World," produced and directed by Stanley Kramer.

Before the movie's release, its distributors, with characteristic disregard for balance and quality, sliced out frame after frame of Buster Keaton, Dick Shawn, Howard da Silva, Milton Berle, Phil Silvers, Sid Caesar, Spencer Tracy, and Ethel Merman. Stan Freberg, radio's Man of a Thousand Voices, had every one of his lines cut from the final version. Comic genius Buster Keaton ended up with only one line.

Eric Federing's vision is of a fully restored, 193-minute film.

Eric's fascination with the film dates back to its release, but his obsession began in 1978 when he learned of a missing 39 minutes. Since that time, he has established a network of fans, movie executives, archivists, and collectors, all dedicated to restoring the movie, widely acclaimed in 1963 and today as the last of the "all-star cast" comedies in the silent movie tradition. "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" is arguably the funniest comedy of all time.

Eric's search has led him through film cutting rooms, private film libraries, studio storage bins, all the way up to the sealed doors of a salt mine in Kansas that has been converted to use as a film storage vault. Usually, he has carried on the search by himself, with occasional help from others nearly as dedicated.

Commentators have not taken Eric Federing's efforts very seriously. The metaphors have been unkind. But like the tenacious carp swimming tirelessly against the current, Eric has not become discouraged with uncooperative movie people. "I guess they're just not in for the long haul," he said, with characteristic understatement, in a recent Washington Post article.

Critics have called his efforts for 39 minutes of classic comedy footage quixotic. Wisely, Eric Federing has chosen to ignore their slings and arrows as well as such arguments as "Do we really want to hear 39 minutes of Ethel Merman's voice?" Instead, he has focused his attention on a larger issue: The preservation of America's film heritage.

Hundreds of classic movies have literally disintegrated in their cans, victims of aging. Preservation efforts lag years behind demand and each film lost is a great loss for the popular history of our country.

Eric's latest project materializes on November 7, the 24th anniversary of the world premiere of "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World." He is organizing and hosting a tribute to the film in Akron, Ohio's Civic Theater, one of the last "atmospheric" theaters designed by John Eberson still standing in the United States. These grand old movie houses are falling prey to wrecking balls, casualties of popular culture no longer as concerned with quality as with quantity, much like the movies that Eric is fighting to protect.

I commend Eric Federing's efforts and I very much hope that my colleagues will be able to attend. For like a bee, whose labors enrich the lives of everyone who enjoys a flower or savors honey, Eric Federing, through his efforts to restore 39 minutes of footage to "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World," is befitting all movie goers by saving a piece of our film history from vanishing forever.

Mr. Speaker, Eric Federing has worked long, hard hours on this festival honoring "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World." He deserves all the best. To Eric I offer this wish: Break a Leg.

COASTAL ZONE MANAGEMENT

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, last month I testified before the Merchant Marine Subcommittee on Oceanography in support of H.R. 3202, legislation which Congressman PANETTA and I have introduced to give the States a greater role in the process leading to offshore oil exploration and development.

Today, I would like to submit a copy of my comments for the RECORD so that my colleagues might consider supporting this proposal.

TESTIMONY OF THE HONORABLE ANDY IRELAND

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before the Subcommittee today in support of H.R. 3202, legislation that Congressman Panetta and I have introduced to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act. As you know, this bill would give the States a role in determining whether prelease and lease activities associated with offshore oil and gas exploration are consistent with a State's coastal management plans. I am also grateful, Mr. Chairman, for your involvement and support of this proposal.

This legislation would, I believe, correct a significant flaw, created by a 1984 Supreme Court decision, in our current system of oil and gas exploration and leasing on our Outer Continental Shelf. I believe that when Congress passed the Coastal Zone Management Act in 1972, it intented to assure States with federally approved coastal management plans that federal activities affecting those coastal areas would be consistent with the State plans. The Supreme Court decision, however, dictated that the law did not require that the Interior Department sales of offshore tracts for oil and gas exploration be consistent with coastal management plans adopted by the states and approved by the U.S. Department of Commerce. I believe the Court was wrong in its interpretation of Congressional intent on the Coastal Zone Management Act.

Passage of H.R. 3202 will overturn that decision and return to the State their ability to impact the OCS process at an earlier stage, at the time of the lease sales. Currently, the States can only make consistency findings when asked to approve drilling permits.

To illustrate the importance of this legislation, I would like to reiterate the experiences of the State of Florida with the Department of Interior's current five-year oil and gas leasing plan, issued in June 1987. The Florida Congressional Delegation as well as the State of Florida opposed the plan, because it includes for potential lease some of Florida's most environmentally sensitive areas—the Florida Keys, which contain the only living coral reef in the Continental United States; Apalachicola Bay, prized for its oyster beds; and the southwest Florida shelf in the eastern Gulf of Mexico, which includes some unique marine habitats.

The OCS Lands Act requires the Department of Interior to strike a balance between energy needs and protection of such environmental resources. The Act sets up a mechanism by which the Department can coordinate federal leasing activities with the Governors of the States. The current five-year plan does not strike that crucial balance.

Despite months of negotiations and good faith efforts on the part of all of us representing Florida, the Department of Interior released its plan having paid little attention to the reams of comments received in opposition—not only from the State and the Congressional Delegation, but also from private citizens and organized groups within the State. At this point Congress has no further right to appeal in the OCS leasing process. While the State of Florida has filed a petition for judicial review, I know of no previous review that has ruled for the State over the Department of the Interior.

Clearly, federal consistency legislation such as H.R. 3202 is not only an environmental imperative, but also an economic necessity for States such as Florida. In 1986, for example, Floridians hosted 35.7 million visitors from throughout the United States. The Florida Department of Commerce estimates that these visitors spent $20 billion and added about $1 billion in revenues to the State. The State conducts visitor surveys which rank the reasons people come to Florida. Number one on everyone's list is our BEACHES. Close behind, at 2 and 3, are relaxation and climate; further down the list, but nonetheless important, are water sports and recreational fishing at numbers 6 and 7. In addition, commercial and recreational fishing is estimated to have an economic value of $2.5 billion to the State.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the livelihood of many Floridians depends on our natural resources, primarily our pristine coastline and beautiful waters. The State of Florida is in the best position to determine what activities could potentially cause harm to these resources and whether the risk is worth any potential benefits. For this reason, the State should be able to affect the leasing process at an earlier stage, as would be permitted under H.R. 3202.

Further, you may recall, Mr. Chairman, that the dissenting views of the Supreme Court at the time of the 1984 decision emphasized that if there were to be problems in the leasing process, it would be to everyone's best interests to know what these problems were early on in the oil exploration process. Given the economic investment which oil interests must make just to lease the desired tracts, it would seem prudent business practice to know all of the potential costs prior to the permit application phase. I believe, therefore, that this legislation will benefit the States by providing increased participation in the process, as well as the oil development companies by providing the opportunity for a more accurate cost-benefit analysis. Thus, the long-term energy outlook for the United States would be improved.

To my knowledge, the State of Florida has always been fair with lessees during the consistency review of permit applications. It is my understanding that many more drilling permits have been granted by the State than have been disapproved due to inconsistencies with the State's coastal management plan.

This legislation does not give the State a veto, but provides it a greater role in a process that could have extremely serious effects on its ecology and economy. The oil interests have nothing to fear by cooperating with the State in the development of a balanced approach to oil leasing. Everyone wins when we devise ways to protect our vital environmental resources while we develop our energy resources.

I therefore urge the speedy approval of H.R. 3202 by the Subcommittee.

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to take note of an insightful article written by Prof. Robert F. Drinan concerning the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II. Although the article was written before the House passed H.R. 442, the content of Mr. Drinan's discerning passage is well worth consideration. I urge my colleagues to take a few moments to read it.

A THOUSAND DAYS' DETENTION

(By Robert F. Drinan)

Will the 60,000 surviving Japanese-Americans confined to detention camps during World War II finally receive some indemnification for their improper incarceration? The Civil Liberties Act of 1987, H.R. 442 and S. 1009, designed to achieve that end, could be enacted in the near future. H.R. 442, with 135 co-sponsors, passed the House Judiciary Committee overwhelmingly. S. 1009, with more than 75 co-sponsors including Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd and Minority Leader Robert Dole, is expected to pass.

As a member of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians appointed by President Carter and the Congress in 1980, I experienced in 20 days of hearings with over 750 witnesses the sufferings of the Americans of Japanese origin who were confined for three-and-one-half years in bleak barracks inland from the West Coast. The commission established the facts on which experts had previously come to a general consensus: There was no military necessity for uprooting Japanese families, citizens and noncitizens alike. Not a single case of espionage, sabotage or fifth-column activity was committed by an American citizen of Japanese ancestry or by a resident Japanese alien on the West Coast. Moreover, the Japanese community in Hawaii—one-third of the population of that island—was not confined. Nor were Japanese outside the West Coast arrested. It is also noteworthy that not a single resident of the United States of German or Italian origin was detained solely because of ethnic background.

The Commission on Wartime Relocation established conclusively in its 467-page report that it was wartime hysteria and a long tradition of anti-Japanese feeling in California that led to the decision to round up and confine all Japanese-Americans. The hearings the commission conducted in San Francisco, Seattle and elsewhere were extraordinarily moving as the residents of the two dozen camps recalled their humiliation and shame at being, in essence, accused of disloyalty to the nation they had adopted or in which they were born. Witnesses related how there was almost a conspiracy of silence about the camps by those who endured them lest, in their judgment, anti-Japanese feeling break out again.

It was the children and the grandchildren of those confined who, refusing to accept their elders' silence and shame over their imprisonment, began to insist that the Government that humiliated their parents and grandparents investigate its own conduct. Thus the Commission on Wartime Relocation was born. Made up of nine persons, including former Justice Arthur J. Goldberg and former Senator Edward W. Brooke, the commission worked effectively with archivists, ehtnic groups and historian who have produced a vast array of documents about an event unprecedented in American history—the confinement without a hearing or a trail of a large number of people only because of their race.

The commission looked for evidence that would justify the decision to segregate the Japanese community. There was little, if any, militay justification. One man, General John L. DeWitt, responsible for security on the West Coast, urged the Secretary of War, Henry L. Stimson, to persuade President Roosevelt to act. On Feb 19, 1942, 10 weeks after Pearl Harbor, President Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066 giving the power to the military to confine all persons, citizens aliens, not because they were suspected of sabotage, but only because they were of Japanese ancestry. In the chaos of the first few weeks of World War II, little attention was given to the fact that 20,000 persons of Japanese ancestry were taken to barracks in desolate areas of the West.

The commission saw evidence, oral and written, of the hateful, anti-Japanese feeling at the time and the general approval of what was done to the Americans of Japanese origin.

The only group to protest the mass exclusion and detention was the American Civil Liberties Union. The lawsuit it brought was lost in the United States Supreme Court. But it was the work of the A.C.L.U. along with others, that helped to expedite the release of many Japanese after the American victory in Midway in June 1942 made the possibility of serious Japanese attacks on the United States no long credible.

The report of the Commission on Wartime Relocation persuaded a number of members of Congress that the nation should redress the injustices done to the Japanese community during World War II. During hearings at which I was authorized to testify on behalf of the commission, it became clear that the members of Congress realized that the contention that there was in fact no military necessity to separate and segregate all Japanese-Americans on the West Coast raised the most serious questions. No U.S. Government may take away the liberty of its citizens, even in wartime, unless there is some clear and provable reason. Lacking any such reason, the deprivation of liberty of any U.S. citizen is a clear violation of the Constitution, which states in the 14th Amendment that no person may be deprived of "life, liberty or property without due process of law."

There was some testimony given to Congress opposed to the claims of the commission. It reflected a reluctance to challenge the correctness of a judgment made by a high military official in the early days of the war—a decision that was ratified by the President, the Congress and the Supreme Court. Some persons in Congressional testimony also objected to the recommendation of the commission that there be a sum of $20,000 made available to every person confined to the camps for the duration of the war. That sum was calculated roughly on the idea that there should be at least $20 per day given in reparation for illegal confinement; that sum has some basis in judgments levied against Federal and state governments when they have wrongly detained persons. Since the average or median time for detention of the Japanese-Americans was 1,000 days, the suggested amount of reparation was $20,000. The commission thought first of rewarding the survivors of all those detained, but ultimately recommended that only the actual survivors collect. The commission, recognizing that the surviviors are at an age when many are dying, recommended that the oldest survivors be compensated first.

The bills presently before Congress stipulate that the survivors be paid over a three-year period. It is uncertain how many of the survivors would actually claim the money due them. Several prominent survivors have said that they would not file a claim. But they are very anxious that Congress enact and the President sign the bill that extends an apology to the Japanese people for America's violations of their rights during the war between the United States and Japan. But even if all the 60,000 detainees claim the $20,000 the total payout of $1.2 billion would be significantly less than the economic losses of the ethnic Japanese during 1942–46 which, as estimated by the Commission on Wartime Relocation, ranged from $2.5 billion to $6.2 billion.

Also involved in the mandate of the commission was the relocation of many families from the Aleutian Islands during World War II. While the removal of these American citizens may have been justified for military reasons, there has been no indemnification to the Aleuts, devout followers of the Russian Orthodox faith and represented ably on the Commission by a Russian Orthodox priest, the Rev. Ishmael V. Gromoff. The commission recommended that appropriate indemnification be made to the surviving Aleuts who were injured by the actions taken by the United States Government.

After I was appointed to the Commission on Wartime Relocation, I reread the opinion of the Supreme Court in Hirabayashi v. United States, decided on June 2, 1943, in which the Court unanimously sustained the constitutionality of Executive Order 9066.

I also reread Korematsu v. United States, in which, on Dec. 18, 1944, the Supreme Court in a 6-to-3 ruling sustained the conviction of an American citizen of Japanese descent for violating an order given pursuant to Executive Order 9066. After hearing from dozens of Japanese internees and reading the several major books on the confinement of the 120,000 Japanese-Americans (two-thirds of whom were U.S. citizens), I concluded that Justices Frank Murphy, Owen J. Roberts, and Robert H. Jackson were correct in their dissent in Korematsu. Justice Jackson, a former U.S. Attorney General, wrote that military orders are subject to review for their compliance with the Constitution and that even if General DeWitt's orders were "permissible military procedures" it does not follow that they have to be constitutional. Justice Murphy was more blunt: For him, the challenged practice was a "legalization of racism."

Americans have not focused much attention in the last 40 years on the confinement of the Japanese. The Canadians who detained most of the Japanese in Canada during the war—under worse conditions and for a longer period of time than the United States did—have also been content to forget about the sense of outrage and feeling of humiliation the Japanese community experiences today over the way in which its members were treated. The December 1982 report of the Commission on Wartime Relocation is the first official compilation of all the evidence about the acts of the United States Government toward a tiny minority of its people. The feeling appears to be growing that those acts, however, understandable at the time they were taken, must now, in the light of history, be deemed shameful.

The 100th Congress is thinking seriously of enacting a measure that is designed to confess error and make amends. No one should underestimate the resistance to that measure or be unaware of the widespread reluctance to bring it up—especially in view of the anxiety, and even panic, over the enormous federal deficit.

Every person experiences moments of regret for things done years ago. The stab of conscience is itself a grace of God. Nations, too, experience moments of grace when they recognize and regret evil things done. Perhaps the 100th Congress will recognize and recompense what a nation, angry at its opponent in war, did to 20,000 human beings of Japanese ancestry.

TRIBUTE TO LLOYD M. BENTSEN, SR.

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, today the Texas Business Hall of Fame will induct into its ranks one of our State's living legends—Lloyd M. Bentsen, Sr., of Mission, TX, which I share with him as our hometown.

Many of our colleagues will recognize his name—he is the father of our State's senior Senator, LLOYD M. BENTSEN, Jr.

The elder Mr. Bentsen came to the Rio Grande Valley during World War I when he was taking flight training in San Antonio. One look and he stayed for good.

In Texas, the name Lloyd M. Bentsen, Sr., is known by virtually everyone. His civic and business accomplishments place him among the greats in Texas and America, and yet always his character has been marked by modesty and a deep sense of philanthropy.

Today the Texas Business Hall of Fame will meet in Houston to bring Mr. Bentsen into the league of Texas giants who have made our State the powerhouse that it is. The Hall of Fame for Texas business acknowledges an individual's lifetime contributions and achievements, and for Mr. Bentsen this includes agriculture, real estate, oil and gas operations, banking and financial interests, and insurance. In all these areas Lloyd M. Bentsen, Sr., has created jobs for the Texas workforce and fueled our economy to an enormously significant extent.

Mr. Bentsen is enjoying his 93d year of life—and still he works. He continues to manage the business empire which he created—and if one drives through the lush citrus orchards near his home in Mission, one might just catch a glimpse of Mr. Bentsen pruning away at the trees or picking some especially ripe fruit from the top of an extension ladder.

Because this Congressman has had the privilege of knowing Mr. Bentsen for so many years—I know he will forgive me if I dspense with modesty in my accolades to him. There is no reason for me to cloak my words in anything other than genuine pride. He is a Texan in the great tradition of those pioneer giants who shaped the State and contributed to its image as "bigger than life."

We congratulate our fellow Texan on his induction into the Texas Business Hall of Fame, and for enriching our lives with his unmatched character and great humanity toward all.

MED-AMERICA ACT OF 1987

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to provide access to health insurance for many individuals who are currently unable to purchase insurance. This legislation was developed by Senator JOHN CHAFEE, a member of the Senate Finance Committee and the Subcommittee on Health, which has jurisdiction over the Medicaid Program in the Senate. Senator CHAFEE has long labored in this field and has set as one of his highest priorities the provision of widespread and effective health care services to those who do not have access to such services. I share his commitment to this goal. In fact, I have also introduced H.R. 169, the national voluntary health insurance plan, an overall approach to the health insurance issue.

H.R. 169 would provide total coverage of all necessary medical and hospital care, without limits, exclusions or deductibles, for all Americans at about the same cost to the Government as the estimated present and projected cost of Medicare and Medicaid, which would be eliminated. It is based on the successful system currently operating in British Columbia. I believe the program would provide a practical and effective means of stopping the present rapid inflation in hospital costs, by greatly reducing administrative, collection, and malpractice insurance costs, among other things.

If enacted I believe this bill would provide a more effective system of health care for those who are in need of it. However, in the meantime we must proceed one step at a time. This is why I have introduced the Med-America bill.

It is estimated that between 1980 and 1985, the number of uninsured individuals grew by almost 25 percent. Between those same years the number of uninsured children grew by 14 percent. Yet during the debate on catastrophic health care in Congress, those under 65 have been largely ignored. I believe that if we are truly interested in addressing catastrophic health care expenses, we must look at both the old and the young.

More than one-third of those without any health care insurance live in families with incomes below the poverty level. Another one-third live in families with incomes between 100 and 200 percent of the poverty level.

There are other individuals who, even if they could afford to purchase insurance, are without access to private health care insurance. Who are they? They are those who have what we call preexisting conditions—some kind of a condition that causes insurance companies to refuse to insure them. Thousands of aids patients fall into this category.

Finally, there are individuals with chronic illnesses who exhaust their private health care insurance and have no where to go but into poverty to qualify for Medicaid benefits. AIDS patients frequently fall into this group, too.

For families with a chronically ill child, where the parents are relatively well off and possibly both working, to suddenly have a child with extremely severe problems means they must spend their way down into poverty so they can receive Medicaid assistance. They must exhaust their resources. Although they are trying, all they can qualify for is Medicaid.

The Med-America bill is a new approach to these problems. The bill would build on the existing Medicaid Program in three ways:

First, it would sever the tie between Medicaid and cash benefit programs—such as AFDC and SSI. As a result, States would have the option of providing Medicaid benefits to anyone whose income is below the Federal poverty level, regardless of whether or not they qualify for cash welfare programs.

Second, States would have the option to allow individuals—the so-called working poor—whose incomes are at or near the Federal poverty level to purchase health insurance through Medicaid for an income-adjusted premium, not to exceed 3 percent of the individuals' or family's adjusted gross income.

Finally, States would have the option to allow persons with family incomes and resources in excess of 200 percent of the Federal poverty level to purchase Medicaid benefits for a nonincome adjusted premium if they have been excluded from private health insurance coverage because of a medical impairment or disability or if they have exhausted one or more benefits under their private insurance plans.

I strongly believe that these steps will go far in providing Americans with access to effective health care. I urge my colleagues to join me in my effort to offer the security of health insurance to all our Nation's citizens.

SUMMARY OF MED-AMERICA INTRODUCED BY CONGRESSMAN BOB LAGOMARSINO—OCTOBER 29, 1987

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

At its option, and in addition to existing Medicaid optional coverage categories currently enumerated in the statute, a State may extend coverage to the following individuals:

(a) Persons with family incomes under 200% of the federal poverty level, or such other lower limit that the State may establish. Those individuals between 100% and 200% of the federal poverty level would be required to pay an income adjusted premium in order to receive these benefits. The premium can be no greater than 3% of the individual's or family's adjusted gross income.

(b) Persons with family incomes and resources in excess of 200% of the federal poverty level (or the lower level established by the State) who have been excluded from private health insurance coverage because of a medical impairment or disability or who have exhausted one or more benefits under their private insurance plans. These individuals would be allowed to purchase the Medicaid benefit with a non-income adjusted premium.

(c) Employers who are unable to purchase affordable private coverage for their employees.

BENEFITS

At a minimum, a State which elects this option would have to provide the following items and services: inpatient and outpatient hospital care; physician services; x-ray services, EPSDT and family planning services; dental services; prescription drugs; dentures; prosthetic devices; eyeglasses; rehabilitative services; and clinical services furnished by or under the direction of a physician. Hospital and physician services for the full buy-in populations (i.e. those who have exhausted their private insurance benefits or have been denied coverage by private insurers) could not be limited by the States.

Additionally, at its option a State may include in this plan all other Medicaid services allowed under federal law, including home and community-based care services, but excluding services of long-term care institutions including skilled nursing facilities, intermediate care facilities, and intermediate care facilities for the retarded.

PREMIUMS AND COST-SHARING

A State would establish an annual premium, to be paid in monthly amounts, equal to the average per recipient expenditure (excluding expenditures for long-term institutional services) during the latest period for which recipient and expenditure payment data are available. A family premium would be established for individuals purchasing coverage for themselves and for related members of their households.

Persons with incomes in excess of 200% of the federal poverty level (or the level established by the State) who are eligible under this program, would pay the full annual premium in monthly amounts.

Persons with family incomes between 100% and 200% of the federal poverty level would pay a monthly amount equal to no more than 3% of their total family adjusted gross income, as reflected in their latest federal income tax returns. Families would be eligible to have their premium contribution amount recalibrated if there were a significant change in their incomes that necessitated an adjustment in the size of their premium payment.

Families with incomes under 100% of the federal poverty level would not pay any portion of the premium.

Employers seeking coverage for employees would pay the full premium. They may choose to contribute to the cost of such coverage as a part of an employee's benefit package and thereby reduce the employee's actual health insurance costs.

A State could impose co-payment (but not deductible) requirements on families or individuals. In the case of families with incomes below the federal poverty level, co-payments could not exceed those imposed on the categorically needy. In the case of other persons covered under this program, co-payment may also be imposed for prescribed drugs, eyeglasses, dental services, dentures, and prosthetic devices even if they were not imposed on other Medicaid recipients. In no event, however, may co-payments be required for medical, dental and vision services furnished under EPSDT or for pregnancy-related care.

MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT AND CONDITIONS OF PARTICIPATION

1. In order to qualify for this program, a State's AFDC payment levels would have to be as high as they were on the date that this measure was introduced.

2. In order for a State to take advantage of the options in Med-America to provide insurance for the full cost buy-in groups (those who have been excluded from private health insurance coverage because of a medical impairment or disability or who have exhausted one or more benefits under their private insurance plans), it would be required to fully implement the SOBRA optional provisions for children and pregnant women and low-income elderly.

3. The mandatory benefit package for the buy-in population established by Med-America would also be mandatory for all individuals below 100% of poverty who qualify for the Medicaid program.

AGRICULTURE FREE MARKET AT WORK

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post of October 25, 1987, reported a story of a true success story in American agriculture—the cranberry industry. The cranberry industry is remarkable in today's world of price supports, crop subsidies, and market orders. Through hard work and perseverance our country's cranberry growers have developed a remarkable story and an industry which has climbed into the Fortune 500.

I commend this article to my colleagues and again congratulate Ocean Spray, Inc., and the cranberry growers of our country.

CRANBERRIES: AGRICULTURAL FREE MARKET AT WORK—GROWERS AREN'T BOGGED DOWN IN USDA REGULATIONS, SUBSIDIES AND ALLOCATIONS

(By Ward Sinclair)

WAREHAM, MASS.—For the last 150 years, give or take a few, the Makepeace family has mucked a living from the sandy soil near Cape Cod, so on this cool October day Christopher Makepeace followed ritual: He went down to the bogs to once more watch the red gold roll in.

Christopher Makepeace is a cranberry grower. The world's largest cranberry grower, in fact, with 1,400 acres of low-lying bogs that produce the tart fruit that goes into the juices and relishes that adorn the shelves of most American grocery stores.

Harvest was under way in this 28-acre bog, flooded to the depth of a man's knee. Brilliantly red cranberries had been gentled from their vines by a shaker machine, floated to the surface and then quickly corraled and guided to shore by a work crew manipulating long wooden booms.

A huge vacuum machine sucked the berries from the water, sent them up a conveyor belt and into a waiting semitrailer that would hustle them down the road to a receiving station operated by Ocean Spray Cranberries Inc., a wildly successful farmers' cooperative that has climbed to Fortune 500 status.

Although the crop seemed abundant in this bod, looks were deceiving. "We had our best year ever last year," Makepeace said, "but this will be an off-year. It was dry in July and August and the crop suffered. The water is vital."

Now, when one thinks agriculture, the cranberry may be one of the last commodities to come to mind. Because it requires boggy, low-lying soil with a heavy clay base, it is grown commercially only in Massachusetts and four other states. And of course, the cranberry isn't high visibility—not your everyday staple.

But while their grain-growing counterparts elsewhere have reeled from one economic punch after another over the last five years, the obscure cranberry farmers have been doing just fine.

Moreover, they are doing well without a hint of federal assistance. Cranberry growing may be the quintessential example of an agricultural free market at work, with demand just enough ahead of supply to make farmers happy, and with the growers' own Ocean Spray cooperative assuring an adequate price for the raw product.

Unlike the grain farmer, the cranberry growers get no federal crop subsidies and their fruit has no federal price supports. Federal marketing orders do not allocate market shares or limit new growers, as occurs with some other crops. No surplus jams the warehouses; supply barely keeps pace with demand. And Ocean Spray, owned by 600 cranberry and 140 grapefruit growers, keeps profits up by pushing out new juice and relish mixes.

Although national acreage planted to cranberries has remained constant at less than 25,000 acres for 15 years, per-acre yields and prices have risen steadily and many farmers can figure on a remarkable gross of $10,000 per acre in a good season.

"It's a very stable industry: Every berry that is grown is used," said Jere D. Downing, Ocean Spray's horticultural director at nearby Plymouth. "All the pieces fit together. We're trying to match business development with available crops. As the crop gets bigger we can add new business outlets."

Yet not all is well in the bogs.

As urban development crowds in around the growing areas just an hour south of Boston and as public concern grows over pesticide pollution of groundwater, the industry is under unaccustomed pressures. And expansion into new bogs is limited because federal agencies refuse to allow disruption of wetlands, which the bogs are by definition.

Pushed and cajoled by the state government and lured by the prospect of cutting their costs, many growers are reducing their pesticide expenses through integrated pest management (IPM) techniques that require sophisticated oversight.

"We want to cut the industry's chemical use 75 percent by 1991," said August (Gus) Schumacher Jr., state commissioner of food and agriculture. "We are getting private industry and the state university involved in helping the growers find alternatives . . . and a number of these farmers, on their own, have made major reductions in chemical use through IPM practices."

Doug Beaton, president of the Cape Cod Cranberry Growers Association and, like Makepeace, a fourth-generation grower, agreed with Schumacher, adding that less pesticide use is in the industry's best interest.

"This is where we make our living. This is our spot. A lot of us live on our bogs, so it behooves us to be careful," Beaton said. "Chemicals have been a part of our success, but we also are better farmers, and a key concern for all of us is our clean water."

This sensivity stems in part from the 1959 chemical scare that sent the industry into a major tailspin. Just before Thanksgiving that year, the federal government announced that a small part of the crop had been tainted by a cancer-causing weed killer. Consumers turned their backs on cranberries; tons of the fruit were destroyed, and farmers abandoned thousands of acres of bogs.

"As people come in closer toward where we farm, we're getting asked more and more questions," Downing said. "There's very little understanding outside of the cranberry world how this fruit is grown."

And as the world draws closer, real estate developers come knocking on growers' doors every day with alluring offers for their land. Farmers like Beaton and Makepeace aren't interested.

"It's a life style, and people just can't understand when we say we don't want to sell," Makepeace said.

Beaton added: "We may have a large co-op working for us, but we're still small farmers and we've learned to be independent—we even custom-build a lot of our own equipment. It gives us pleasure to know we're working with a crop that has a historical image that goes back to the Pilgrims."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, on October 15, I was necessarily absent and was unable to vote on the question of final passage of H.R. 162, the high-risk occupational disease notification bill. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on rollcall No. 359.

LEGISLATING LIMITING PAY OF CONSULTANTS

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, today my colleague, FRANK HORTON, and I are introducing legislation which will limit the rate of pay at which the U.S. Postal Service can compensate independent consultants to the same rate as that paid by other agencies and offices of the Federal Government. Senator PRYOR recently brought to the public's attention the fact that the U.S. Postal Service hired an individual consultant at the outrageous sum of $900 a day. In effect, the consultant functioned as a postal employee. He worked in an office at the U.S. Postal Service headquarters, his clerical support was provided by postal employees, his telephone, office supplies, and all other needs were furnished by the U.S. Postal Service. The staff assembled to assist in the project were all postal employees.

The consultant collected the staggering sum of $156,000 for 7½ months' work. This sum is $100,000 more than the earnings which a Senior Executive Service official, being paid at the maximum salary, would have earned over the same period of time. He also received $14,000 for expenses during this period. The same consultant was then rehired 10 months later at the same rate of pay to evaluate the results of his own recommendations. During this 130-day work period he pocketed another $117,000 and, I presume, several thousands more for expenses. This rate of pay is equivalent to an annual salary of $234,000, not including additional amounts for expenses. The annual equivalent which the consultant received exceeds, by almost three times, the amount earned by the Postmaster General. There are many chief executives of major corporations whose salaries are substantially lower.

In recent years the U.S. Postal Service has been able to hire a number of top executives, including the Postmaster General, from the corporate world at standard postal salaries. I have no doubt that they can fill any needs for consultants at the same levels of compensation. The use of consultants is widespread throughout the Federal Government and the needs which give rise to the consulting services have been met under the limitations set forth in existing Federal law. I know that the needs of the U.S. Postal Service can also be met within these same limitations.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation was drafted with the close cooperation with the U.S. Postal Service. In fact, the final language is the result of suggestions made by the U.S. Postal Service to the Subcommittee on Postal Operations and Services, which I am privileged to chair. Under the proposed legislation, the U.S. Postal Service will still be able to retain specialized services such as independent accounting services. The U.S. Postal Service will also be able to retain consultants to meet specific needs as it has in the past when it hired consulting firms to review safety procedures and to study equal employment opportunities.

In light of the fact that the U.S. Postal Service projects losses between $200 and $250 million in fiscal year 1987, and that a request for higher rates that will go into effect next spring is before the Postal Rate Commission, the proposed legislation makes good financial sense.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Postal Operations and Services, I, along with the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. HORTON, are committed to making every effort to find areas where money can be saved or expenses limited, and this is one such area. We urge our colleagues to support this measure when it comes before us.

HAPPY GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY TO MR. AND MRS. GENTRY SCHULTZ FRY

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a very special occasion that few of us are fortunate enough to experience.

We live today in a society characterized by change and instability. The traditional values of home and family, along with the institutions we grew up with—education, religion, the law, marriage—all seem less cohesive today.

That is why I am particularly pleased and privileged to have an opportunity to commend Mr. and Mrs. Gentry Schultz Fry on the occasion of their golden wedding anniversary.

Now living in Broward County, FL, Nancy and Gentry were married on Saturday, November 6, 1937. Today, they join the ranks of those who have loved, endured, agreed and, I'm sure, disagreed, for five decades. They can look back on those years with great pride and accomplishment.

Knowing their philosophy of life, I can safely say that the most cherished of those accomplishments are their 7 children and 16 grandchildren.

First there is Susan, now Mrs. Robert B. Lochrie, Jr., and their children, Robert, Glenn, and Kate; next, there is Bill and his daughters, Dana, Amber, and Kim; there is Martha and myself and our children, Christine, Andrew, Caroline, and Paul; there is Roger and his wife Carol, and their children Gentry, Lucy, and Cassidy; there is Steve and his wife, Aida, and their children, Will, Genevive, Amelia, and the spirit of Maya; there is Mary Alice and her husband, Mike; and, last but never least, Tracy.

That Nancy and Gentry would be graced with so many children and grandchildren should surprise no one; both of them come from large, happy families.

Born Anna Marie Wagner in Brooklyn, NY, Nancy, as she is affectionately called, is the daughter of Annie Golden Wagner and Julius Wagner. She is one of 10 children, with 4 sisters and 5 brothers.

Known to his friends as "Gabe" or "Schultz," Gentry Schultz Fry was born in Hannibal, MO. He is the son of Catherine Schultz Fry and James William Fry. Gentry is one of seven children, with three brothers and three sisters.

After 20 years of distinguished service in the U.S. Navy, Gentry and Nancy, a dedicated wife and mother, moved to Florida in 1950.

As they celebrate their 50th anniversary, Nancy and Gentry demonstrate to all of us the enduring power of love and commitment. I join with all of their friends, and our friends and families, in celebrating their success, past and future, and wishing them many more joyous anniversaries.

RANDOLPH WILLIAM STRIAR AND DANIEL E. STRIAR TO BE HONORED BY ROFEH INTERNATIONAL

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. R.W. Striar, of Milton, will be honored as Man of the Year by the New England Chassidic Center at its 72d annual dinner on November 8, 1987, at Boston's Park Plaza Hotel.

His son, Mr. D.E. Striar, will be recognized at the same time as the benefactor of the Striar Rofeh Building in Brookline.

Mr. R.W. Striar has been a communal leader in the Greater Boston area for over six decades. He has a long history of association not only with the present Bostoner Rebbe, Grand Rabbi Levi Y. Horowitz, founder of Rofeh International, but also was a close friend and supporter of the first Bostoner Rebbe, Grand Rabbi Pinchas David Horowitz, founder of the New England Chassidic Center.

The link to the Bostoner Rebbe dates back to more than 70 years ago when David Phillip and Annie Bessie Striar helped the late Bostoner Rebbe found the Chassidic Center in 1914, located then on Poplar Street in the West End of Boston. This site served as the springboard of many spiritual and humane activities that serve the world's Jewish community.

Mr. D.E. Striar, noted business executive, has been involved in diversified businesses ranging from the chemical industry, health care field, and real estate holdings throughout the United States.

Having been brought up in a charitable atmosphere at home, Mr. Striar was able, through his good fortune, to be able to support and nurture the beginnings of a number of important facilities benefiting future generations. Mr. Striar has been involved in establishing many institutions, especially in the areas of medicine where he has dedicated wings at the Shaare Zadek Hospital and Ramban Hospital in Haifa.

Rofeh International, founded by the Bostoner Rebbe, Grand Rabbi Levi Y. Horowitz, has helped thousands who came to Boston seeking medical assistance. The institution provides an eight-family facility to house the patients and their families and a short-term residency program at its 32 bed facility. Rofeh provides contacts with leading physicians and hospitals, interpreters, transportation, and support systems.

President Ronald Reagan and many leaders in the field of medicine have lauded the work and the help provided by Rofeh International.

SIX RIVERS

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, today, with my distinguished colleague Representative STARK, I am introducing legislation to examine methods of protecting the magnificent Smith River region of northern California. The Smith is the last major undammed river in California. The area supports rare, old growth redwoods. The Forest Service's Six Rivers National Forest draft plan published earlier this year proposes extensive timber cutting and makes recommendations that will dramatically alter one of our most precious natural legacies.

This bill will study the suitability of designating this region as a national park. As yet, we hav no national park which includes within its boundaries the watershed of a wild and scenic river. The Smith River, and its watershed, could be an exciting and unique addition to our National Park System.

Yet the Six Rivers National Forest draft plan would, if implemented, deny us this opportunity. It would lead to a substantial increase in the annual timber harvest—up from the current 140 million board feet per year to 175 million board feet per year. All harvesting will be through clearcutting. Within 50 years, according to the plan, all but 6 percent of the region's old-growth forests are to be harvested creating a landscape dominated by tree-farm type forests.

Although parts of the Smith are included in the wild and scenic river system, most of the river is classified as recreational which provides the lowest level of protection available. The Forest Service proposes 20-acre clearcuts and other intensive forest management operations within the quarter mile wide recreation zone on each side of the river and its protected tributaries. This is a clear violation of the intent of the wild and scenic designation.

One paragraph from the plan clearly demonstrates the serious environmental damage that will result from implementation of the proposed forest plan:

> Maintaining visual quality in the future will more difficult as more land and vegetation is altered by management activities, primarily timber harvest activity, and road construction. The demand for visual quality will increase as recreational use of the Forest increases.—Six Rivers National Forest Draft 3-41

During the comment period on the Six Rivers National Forest draft plan, approximately 8,500 comments were received. The majority of these focused on proposals for the Smith River. Comments were also submitted on the planned destruction of old-growth habitat and its impact on the spotted owl—a sensitive species. The Forest Service would maintain old-growth habitat for only 48 out of the estimated 200 pairs of spotted owls. Similar disregard is shown for other rare and sensitive species such as the wolverine and the goshawk.

Also included in our legislation is a study of the local economy to determine its dependence on timber. We believe that there are significant other local interests in addition to timber. Tourism, recreation, and a new prison currently under construction are all helping to diversity the local economy. As the region becomes less economically dependent on timber, it is time to obtain an accurate picture of the diversification and to take action to protect this precious natural legacy.

The bill I am introducing today authorizes a study of this area to determine what action should be taken if we are to conserve the unique, natural heritage of the Smith River. There is a consensus that the management policies for the national forest lands along the Smith River can be improved to reflect the importance attached by the public to the natural resources of this region. We want future generations to have the opportunity to enjoy the Smith River and its watershed. We urge you to join with us in supporting this legislation to achieve these goals.

REPRESENTATIVE ACKERMAN SALUTES U.S. MERCHANT MARINES

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to add my voice to those who are outraged over recent developments in the Persian Gulf. The combatants in the Iran/Iraq war have savaged each other for more than 7 years, and I'm afraid that the Reagan administration has once again put American lives at risk without a coherent and well-defined policy to guide us.

I am particularly moved to reiterate these concerns at this time because on the despicable attack against a U.S.-flagged merchant vessel, the Sea Isle City, in which U.S. merchant marines suffered several casualties. The ship's captain, John Hunt, was blinded by dozens of shards of glass exploding in his face as a result of the direct hit by an Iranian silkworm missile.

The sacrifices of Captain Hunt and his men illustrates once again the often overlooked contributions of our Nation's merchant marine fleet. As an essential component of our commercial and military transportation system, the merchant marine fleet sails to every corner of the globe and is ever-reliable even in the most serious of emergencies.

If tragedies such as the strike against the Sea Isle City have a silver lining, it is the fact that sailors of the merchant marine may yet receive the long-overdue credit and thanks they deserve. Without their service, a dependence on foreign shippers could lead to shortages of shipping services in critical times, excessively high shipping rates and loss of employment, income and the balance of payment benefits generated by domestic maritime industries.

Mr. Speaker, let us hope that we learn some important lessons from this terible action so that innocent men and women will not be unnecessarily subjected to dangers arising from a flawed foreign policy. Let us also resolve to give the Merchant Marine the recognition and appreciation they've earned and to do all in our power as elected officials to protect their lives and welfare.

A QUESTION OF SINCERITY

HON. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. DONALD E. LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, we are all hopeful for evidence of democratization in Nicaragua under the peace accord signed in Guatemala. As signatories, the Sandinistas' support for the principles of those accords ought to be clear and unequivocal. We should be concerned when Sandinista commandante Bayardo Arce attacked the internal opposition in the official Sandinista newspaper Barricada on October 20. Arce said that the opposition had committed a grave error in believing the national dialog was a forum of equals, and stated that there was no alternative to Sandinista rule in Nicaragua.

Members will recall that this is the same commandante who said in 1984 that elections were a ploy for consolidating Marxist-Leninist rule. Mr. Speaker, we should all be concerned about the sincerity of Sandinista pronouncements on the democratization of Nicaragua.

THE 64TH ANNIVERSARY OF TURKEY

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the friendship of the American people and to honor our distinguished allies, the Government and people of Turkey on the 64th anniversary of her founding on this day in 1923 by Kemal Ataturk.

For the United States, the success of Turkey's democratic and economic development since her founding is of utmost importance. Turkey also plays an important role as a bridge between the West and the nations of the Middle East.

The American relationship with the Turkish people has a long history than many Americans realize. There were many facets to this relationship, beginning with trade when four American firms opened business in Ismir between 1810 and 1825. The U.S. Navy came into the Mediterranean to protect commercial shipping and our first commercial treaty was signed in 1830.

After the establishment of the Republic of Turkey in 1923, a United States-Turkish Treaty was signed. Formal diplomatic relations were established in 1927. Contacts and trade broadened, missionaries and educators exchanged ideas, and some business activity developed. Today, we are partners with this key ally in many essential political, defense, and commercial alliances.

Democracy struck deep roots in Turkey and she has enjoyed broad and rapid economic and social progress. When Turkey is compared historically with other Mediterranean and Islamic countries, she must be ranked high among the world's stable countries with a mature and well-balanced political system.

Turkey is of great importance to the United States for geostrategic, political, and economic reasons. In strategic terms, Turkey poses a formidable barrier to Soviet expansion in the eastern Mediterranean and Middle Eastern regions. In political terms, Turkey's position as NATO's only Muslim member makes it a bridge between the Western and Muslim worlds and enables it to play a stabilizing role in the volatile Middle East. The United States clearly has strong reasons to maintain the closest possible working relationship with Turkey.

On Turkey's 64th anniversary, let us join in congratulating this steadfast ally for her achievements and affirm our strong commitment to strengthening this valuable partnership in the future.

ERADICATION OF RIVER BLINDNESS DISEASE

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Miss SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to my colleagues attention the efforts of Merck & Co., and the World Health Organization to wipe out river blindness, a devastating tropical disease. Through the ingenuity of Merck scientists who developed an effective treatment for the disease, the humanitarian action of Merck to donate the drug free of charge, and the efforts of the World Health Organization which assisted in the clinical testing of the drug and now will help distribute the drug, river blindness soon may be eradicated.

River blindness afflicts an estimated 18 million people and threatens another 85 million in much of tropical Africa and in some parts of Latin America. The disease is caused by a parasitic worm which is transmitted by flies that breed in rivers. The disease can result in blindness, weight loss, and disfiguring of the skin; 340,000 people are now blind as a result of the disease and in some villages where the disease is prevalent, the disease has blinded up to 15 percent of the population. Because of concern about disease, some entire villages have moved away from rivers which breed the flies and have settled in less fertile areas adding to the poverty and hunger of these people.

Merck & Co. scientists discovered that a drug used for parasitic infections in livestock is effective against the parasite causing river blindness. Clinical studies conducted by Merck and the World Health Organization have shown that the drug is effective and without serious side effects. A patient can be treated with one or two oral doses a year making it a particularly simple and appropriate treatment for tropical regions without modern health care systems.

Because the disease occurs in poor nations, Merck determined that the only way to get the drug to the people in need was to make the drug available at no charge. Merck and the World Health Organization are now planning to distribute the drug, and the World Health Organization will help tropical nations establish the necessary drug distribution systems.

The actions of Merck and the World Health Organization deserve our highest praise. The skill of Merck scientists and the generosity and compassion of Merck in developing and distributing this treatment will improve the lives of millions of the world's poorest citizens. The expertise of the World Health Organization and the trust it has developed in all areas of the world will be crucial to disseminating the treatment and eradicating this devastating disease. The collaboration of Merck and the World Health Organization in developing and distributing the treatment for river blindness demonstrates industry and government working together at their best to improve world health.

H.R. 3357, A BILL TO INCREASE THE NUMBER OF ACRES PLACED IN CRP

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. HATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced H.R. 3357, a bill to increase the number of acres placed in the Conservation Reserve Program [CRP] and for other purposes. This legislation is identical to S. 1521, a companion bill introduced in the Senate by Senator SAM NUNN.

The CRP was authorized by the Food Security Act of 1985—the farm bill—and under the program farmers enter into contracts to retire highly erodible cropland for 10 years. In return, the U.S. Department of Agriculture makes annual payments to participating farmers and shares one-half of the cost of establishing grass or trees on the land. To date, almost 23 million acres of highly erodible cropland has been accepted into the CRP.

The legislation which I have introduced has several major goals:

First, accelerate enrollment into the CRP with a goal of expanding the reserve to 65 million acres by 1990;

Second, provide farmers new incentives and options for the enrollment of land in the reserve;

Third, mandate the Secretary of Agriculture to formulate and carry out a ground water pilot program to address serious regional water quality or supply problems; and

Fourth, continue Commodity Credit Corporation funding for the CRP through fiscal year 1990 so the program will have a stable and certain funding base as other commodity programs have.

The success of the CRP has been quite pleasing to me in reducing agricultural surpluses, protecting the environment, assisting farmers income, and preserving erodible land. I believe expansion of this program through H.R. 3357 offers many opportunities to the agricultural sector of our Nation to address serious long range problems in a cost effective way.

Expansion of the CRP to include at least 65 million acres of land into the reserve will clearly contribute to supply control efforts of commodities at about one-half of the cost of traditional commodity programs. Also, through expansion of the CRP our farmers and land owners will have a much needed incentive for increasing the reforestation process, which will help increase the predicted timber shortages in the coming years.

This bill also addresses the concerns of farmers who would like to enter land into the CRP but have been told that their land does not qualify. H.R. 3357 would require the Department of Agriculture to offer whatever incentives are necessary to meet the 65-million-acre requirement. These incentives would include advance payments in cash or in kind for up to 50 percent of the total rental payments, bonus payments for permanently retired land, and allowances for commercial use of reserve land used for recreational purposes. The Department may also permit a specified number of acres placed in the conservation reserve to be considered as set-aside acreage under the set-aside program.

This legislation also addresses the extremely serious problem of water quality and quantity. This bill would call for the Secretary of Agriculture to formulate and carry out through 1990 a ground water pilot program in conjunction with the CRP to assist owners and operators of land in conserving and improving the soil and water resources on their farms. I believe this pilot program will help study and examine the many problems dealing with contamination of rural water supplies by fertilizers and pesticides. This is an area which we must continue to research and monitor to reduce the severity of such problems in the future.

As for financing this legislation, H.R. 3357 calls for continued use of Commodity Credit Corporation funding through 1990. A recent report conducted by the American Farmland Trust projects that the Federal Government will save $578 million during the CRP's 10-year lifespan, because the CRP payments will be much less than commodity program payments on the crops that would have been made. The report also projects that as production of commodities drops on these lands, commodity prices will rise, putting an additional $2.3 billion into farmers' pockets by 1990.

The Conservation Reserve Program has been one of the most highly successful programs to come out of the 1985 farm bill, and it is my hope that through H.R. 3357 the CRP can continue to flourish and provide our farmers new opportunities to live off the land. We can also use the CRP to play a role in the growing problem of rural development through the planting of trees and timber harvesting in many of the country's rural areas. I hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting this legislation that will benefit many agricultural interests throughout these United States.

THE 28TH ANNUAL FORT LAUDERDALE INTERNATIONAL BOAT SHOW

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, today marks the beginning of a spectacular 5-day event in my district, the 28th Annual Fort Lauderdale International Boat Show. This year's promises to be the best boat show ever, featuring more than 1,000 boats from countries including Italy, Korea, Finland, Sweden, Great Britain, Greece, Taiwan, Denmark, Australia, Hong Kong, France and, of course, the United States.

Last year's show was the largest in-water show on Earth, and this year's show is even bigger, including every size of boat and every type of nautical gadget imaginable.

Visitors to the show at the Bahia Mar Resort and Yachting Center will see more than $200 million in boats and marine accessories. Boats from 8 to 137 feet in length will be on display, and the show will include live entertainment, tropical fashion shows, and fishing clincis and demonstrations performed by professionals.

Friday is "Viareggio/Italian Day" at the boat show to honor the Fort Lauderdale's "twin city" in Italy. Italian exhibitors will receive special recognition, and many special activities are planned. Viareggio celebrated "Fort Lauderdale Day" on June 2 this year.

The Fort Lauderdale International Boat Show gets bigger and better each year, offering something for everyone. I congratulate the organizers of this year's show for putting on such an exciting and memorable event.

DIRECT ENERGIES TOWARD CHEMICAL WEAPONS AGREEMENT

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, the arms control focus these days has centered on the pending INF agreement with the Soviet Union. I am concerned, however, that this administration's attention has been diverted from two other critical areas: reducing long-range systems and eliminating chemical and biological weapons. I would like to take this opportunity to focus specifically on the vital issue of outlawing chemical weapons.

There can be little doubt that chemical weapons are, today, being used in regional wars around the world. The effects of their use are by most standards gruesome. Onsite inspection of manufacturing and storage facilities is crucial to any agreement, and we must continue to focus our energies on achieving a comprehensive, verifiable ban on these weapons.

It is gratifying to see the Soviets become so amenable to onsite inspection. This shift, however, by no mean signals an imminent agreement. More problems remain, including the issue of how one disposes of these highly toxic chemicals. Nevertheless, it is our task to remind this administration that a comprehensive chemical weapons agreement is sorely needed.

The opportunity now exists to make substantial progress on this issue in Geneva. It is my hope that this administration makes the most of it.

NATIONAL DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

HON. BOB CARR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the month of October as National Domestic Violence Awareness Month. This month has been designated to inform Americans of domestic violence assistance programs, and to educate them about the seriousness of this situation.

The problem of domestic violence is ubiquitious. Violence against women will occur at least once in two-thirds of all marriages. Battering is the single major cause of injury to women, exceeding rape and mugging. The frequency of battering is alarming. In this country, a woman is beaten every 18 seconds.

But the effect of domestic violence is far greater than physical injury. Psychological suffering can be immense and intense. Battered women live in constant fear of further abuse, and are frequently frightened and distrustful of any future relationships.

The Council Against Domestic Assistance of Lansing, MI, is one organization which has provided outstanding service to women in dangerous domestic situations. But the existing network of support for battered women and their children needs to be expanded. By making people aware of the problem and the efforts being taken to reduce it, the Nation is taking an important step in helping battered women and their children escape potentially violent situations. The recognition of October 1987 as National Domestic Violence Awareness Week is an important reminder that a significiant number of American women and children are at risk in their homes every day, and they deserve our protection and our understanding.

LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE: A BILL TO STIMULATE THE PRIVATE MARKET

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, on October 15, I introduced legislation which will move us one step closer toward ensuring that all Americans have adequate protection against the financial catastrophe of long-term care. I was pleased to be joined in this effort by the distinguished minority leader of the House, ROBERT MICHEL; the ranking Republican of the Energy and Commerce Health Subcommittee, Mr. MADIGAN; the chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, Mr. ROYBAL; and by my colleagues Mr. DAUB, Mr. REGULA, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. FRENCH SLAUGHTER, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. GUNDERSON, Mr. SAXTON, and Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, all of whom have demonstrated an active commitment to ensuring affordable health care for senior citizens.

The immediate goal of this legislation is to develop an extensive private long-term care insurance market to help reduce the elderly's dependence on public assistance. The public policy objective is to prevent older persons from becoming impoverished simply because they need long-term home health or nursing home care. Stimulating the growth of an affordable private insurance market and providing incentives to purchase long-term care policies not only benefits the elderly but frees up scarce public funds which can be funneled back into the system for individuals who truly cannot afford to purchase such coverage for themselves. The Medicaid Program spent nearly $16 billion last year on nursing home care for the elderly. That figure is expected to rise to $45 billion by the year 2000. Tragically, nearly half of Medicaid nursing home residents were not initially poor but spent down their income and assets to State Medicaid eligibility levels. Clearly, in light of future demographic changes, Congress must take positive action now if it is to avert a crisis.

Mr. Speaker, as the Medicare catastrophic bill made its way through the House this summer, it did much to focus our attention on the true catastrophe faced by senior citizens and their families—the costs associated with long-term home health and nursing home care. During our deliberations on the Medicare bill we were told again and again that this was the protection seniors needed most. However, we were not then prepared to deal with the awesome proportions of this need. Now, real movement seems possible in the House. The framework for a constructive dialog is in place, and indeed that dialog has already begun in several important committees. Already there is a consensus that any solution to the problem of financing long-term care must be a joint venture between the Federal and State governments and the private sector—a sort of three-legged stool. All three elements are necessary in order to ensure that, whatever the solution ultimately adopted by Congress, it will be balanced and capable of bearing up under the needs of increasing numbers of senior citizens.

The viability of private insurance as a partial solution to the financing of long-term care for the elderly is directly related to, first, whether the premium is affordable, and second, whether the product is designed to meet the needs and desires of consumers. While it will be up to the insurance companies to design and price their individual policies, the Federal Government can encourage both an expansion of the market and the development of policies with minimum benefit standards and affordable premiums through a no-cost reinsurance mechanism and appropriate tax incentives. In order to fully support the market and promote product innovation, the Federal Government must also clarify the tax status of long-term care insurance and remove barriers to several logical and effective product designs.

This bill takes several important steps toward stimulating the development of private long-term care insurance, especially employer-sponsored coverage which has the greatest potential for reaching the most people. It is designed generally to provide tax treatment similar to that afforded health insurance, which has resulted in over 90 percent of the insured population under age 65 receiving their health insurance through the workplace. This has many important advantages for the insured individual. Administrative and marketing costs per person covered drop dramatically when insurance is offered through the workplace. Favorable tax treatment is a strong inducement for employers themselves to pay some or all of the costs of the employee benefit, a further stimulus to coverage. Furthermore, with the employer as the purchaser for the group, the buyer has, or is more likely to have access to, very sophisticated expertise making him a hard bargainer in the insurance marketplace. Premiums are also lower and more affordable when people are younger and healthier. With amendments such as those proposed in this bill, long-term care coverage can be folded into this country's extensive private insurance system. If even a fraction of those individuals who otherwise would have spent down to Medicaid are covered instead by private insurance, Medicaid will realize savings sufficient to offset the costs of these amendments, and more money will be available to those families truly in need.

Now, just to make sure that the intent of this legislation is not misunderstood, let me reiterate that I do not suggest that private long-term care insurance is a total solution to long-term care financing for everyone. Clearly, it will be a number of years before the effects of a long-term care insurance market make themselves felt in the health care economy, and a significant number of people are never likely to be able to purchase long-term care insurance at any price. These, however, are not arguments against stimulating the private market so much as they are arguments that the private market may not be enough—that it can not stand alone as a solution to the problem of financing long-term care.

But resolving the tax status of long-term care insurance in a way that recognizes a legitimate role for private—personal and industry—resources in meeting the costs of long-term care in no way precludes or preempts more comprehensive solutions once they are developed. This industry's tax status will have to be resolved by legislation or regulation in any event. I would like to see it resolved in a constructive matter, and I believe this legislation does just that.

Mr. Speaker, I have enclosed a section-by-section analysis of the bill for the benefit of my colleagues:

LONG-TERM CARE AMENDMENTS—ANALYSIS

Title I of the bill establishes a definition of qualified long-term care insurance for purposes of the internal revenue code. Section 1 of this title clarifies that any long-term-care insurance contract that meets this definition will be treated like life insurance or noncancellable accident and health insurance for insurance company tax purposes. Currently, the tax status of these reserves is uncertain and, unless clarified, unnecessarily increases the cost of long-term car insurance products to consumers. This section will allow insurance companies to claim deductions for reserves and increases in such reserves established for long term care insurance contracts.

Section 2 of the bill clarifies that long-term care insurance will be considered the same as "accident and health" insurance for purposes of the exclusion of benefits received under employee group insurance and employer contributions toward the purchase of such insurance. The inclusion of long-term care as accident and health insurance assures that the payment of long-term care benefits will be excluded from the income of recipients to the extent attributable to non-employer contributions. In addition, benefits paid under employer-paid long term care insurance plans, up to the amount of expenses incurred, will be treated as being incurred for medical care and thus will not be taxable. Section 2 also permits employer contibutions to be excluded from the employee's income. Finally, Section 2 allows employers to offer long-term care insurance as an option in cafeteria style benefit plans. The changes in Section 2 are geared toward giving long-term care insurance the same tax treatment as accident and health insurance.

Section 3 of the bill allows individuals to use their IRA assets, on a tax-free basis, for the express purpose of purchasing qualified long-term care insurance for themselves, their spouse, or their parents. Section 4 of the bill permits consumers to use another resource, life insurance, on a tax-free basis to purchase a qualified long-term care insurance policy. Sections 3 and 4 provide potential vehicles for individual financing of long-term care insurance.

Finally, the remainder of Title I builds on the definition of a qualified long-term care insurance policy and lays out requirements for certification by the Secretary of HHS. The certification process has strict quidelines for protection of the consumer relating to the marketing, design and service requirements of any long-term care insurance policy that qualifies for preferential tax treatment. Under this Title, the Secretary is directed to use the standards set by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners for judging such policies. These standards include fair disclosure in the marketing of policies, scope and definition of coverage, right-to-return conditions that provide a "cooling off" period, a clear prohibition that the policy cannot be cancelled because of advancing age or declining health, and regulations of provisions concerning prior institution-alization. It also strengthens the NAIC standards concerning renewability.

Title II of the bill requires that certified policies be reinsured through a Federal National Reinsurance Corporation, modeled after Fannie Mae, to be established by the Secretary of HHS and capitalized through the offering of debt instruments. Reinsurance helps to protect primary policy underwriters from excess risk, and so allows more aggressive innovation in product design and development. It also allows the products themselves to be offered without an additional "risk loaded" premium and thus helps to keep prices down.

Once again, the goal of this legislation is to encourage long-term care insurance underwrites to offer more comprehensive and affordable products to the public, and to contribute to the wider availability of long-term care coverage, especially through the workplace. Employers play an important role in selecting plans and educating their employees about benefits. These circumstances provide working age consumers more opportunities to gain information and to understand their need for long-term care coverage. It also benefits the worker's parents, since about children often serve as financial advisors to their elderly parents. As more prople become aware of their risks, they will make better decisions about their need for coverage. Insurers will, in turn, respond to the growing sophistication of the market by offering more comprehensive policies with more liberal benefit designs.

GOV. RALPH CARR: MAN OF INTEGRITY

HON. HANK BROWN

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, recently this body approved legislation to compensate the victims of a great injustice, the Japanese-Americans who were so unfairly sent to detention camps during the Second World War.

When America went to war in 1941, the Governor of Colorado, the late Ralph Carr, courageously spoke out against unjust treatment of Americans of Japanese heritage. Recently, the Rocky Mountain News ran an article and an editorial about Governor Carr's actions. I commend them to my colleagues. My thanks go to George L. Robinson, who served on Governor Carr's staff, who brought these articles to my attention.

COMPASSION IN COLORADO—GOVERNOR CARR HELD TO HIS IDEALS DURING WORLD WAR II INTERNMENTS

(By Berny Morson)

In a different America, people in huge art deco theaters watched Orientals in movies, their hair in pigtails, spouting fractured Confucian platitudes.

So, when that America went to war in 1941, people thought nothing of ordering Americans of Japanese heritage—including many who had lived in this country for generations—to leave the West Coast and go to concentration camps lest they serve as enemy spies and saboteurs.

Overtones of racism entered into the mass roundup, as no German immigrants were removed from their homes or neighborhoods on the East Coast or in the Midwest.

When caravans of Japanese-American refugees streamed eastward from California, nine Western governors insisted they keep moving. Only one, Gov. Ralph Carr of Colorado, pointed out that they had the same rights as others under the U.S. Constitution.

"We cannot test the degree of a man's affection for his fellows or his country by the birthplace of his grandfather," Carr told Coloradans in a radio address, three days after Japan bombed Pearl Harbor.

As Americans celebrate the 200th anniversary of the Constitution, Congress this month has voted an apology for the indignity inflicted on Japanese-Americans, and payments of $20,000 to each of the 120,000 survivors of the internment camps.

But few people outside Denver's Japanese-American community remember Carr, who died of a heart attack in 1950, and no one plans to celebrate the 100th anniversary of his birth, which occurs on Dec. 11.

"Ralph Carr? One hundredth birthday? You got me," Loyal Darr, social studies coordinator for the Denver Public Schools, said when asked about the district's plans. "I can't match the name with the deeds."

Marilee Bradbury, social studies coordinator for the Jefferson County Public Schools, had similar difficulty. When her memory was jogged, she recalled the plaque to Carr outside the governor's office at the state Capitol that reads:

"By his humanitarian effort, no Coloradan of Japanese ancestry was deprived of his basic freedoms, and when no other would accept the evacuated West Coast Japanese-Americans, except for confinement in internment camps, Governor Carr opened the doors and welcomed them to Colorado."

"He's not known; he's obscure," laments University of Colorado historian Tom Noel, "He's one of our best and most heroic governors. He was someone who could defy both parties and the conventional wisdom."

In 1974, Japanese-Americans in Denver erected a statue of Carr in the middle of Sakura Square (on 19th Street between Larimer and Lawrence streets).

"He really stuck his neck out for the Japanese people," says Hank Hara of Denver, who arrived in Colorado in 1942 with only the possessions he could cram into a '37 Chevy.

Hara and his relatives drove day and night to reach Colorado. Stopping to eat at a Laramie restaurant, Hara recalls, "We no sooner got in the door, when they said, 'We don't want you Japs.' "

Hara was later a member of the all-Japanese-American 442nd regimental combat team, the most decorated American unit of World War II. "I always wanted to go back up to that restaurant in uniform and see what they say," Hara said. "But I never did."

Kenzo Fujimori, administrator of Sakura Square, was living in Stockton, Calif., when war broke out.

"One Saturday, here comes a carload of FBI and police" to arrest his father, Fujimori recalls. "The next day, we get a call: 'Bring some warm clothing, because your dad is going someplace cold.' We didn't know if he was going to Alaska or Bismarck.

"The only time we saw him was when they put him on a bus. He held out his hand. We held his hand for a while, and then he was gone."

Frank Torizawa, owner of the Granada Fish Market at Sakura Square, was among 500 Japanese-Americans placed under guard at the Santa Anita race track near Los Angeles. Five months later, he was trundled into a railroad car and shipped to the Amache internment camp near Lamar.

"They had barbed wire and tower with soldiers on with machine guns—just like a prison," Torizawa said of Amache.

When the internment order first came, those who did not leave the West Coast voluntarily were rounded up by the Army, herded into railroad cars and shipped as far as Arkansas.

It is not clear why Carr had the courage to oppose such treatment, when others—including President Franklin Roosevelt—did not.

He ignored a U.S. senator who suggested the Colorado National Guard stop Japanese Americans at the state border; he ignored members of the Denver City Council who suggested the Japanese-Americans be placed under armed guard.

And when federal officials picked the site near Lamar for the Amache camp, Carr shocked his Denver neighbors by hiring an internee as his housekeeper.

Carr was born and raised in Colorado mining camps, principally booming Cripple Creek. He was a pudgy man with a quick sense of humor who mixed easily with others.

He was the Boulder correspondent for the Rocky Mountain News while attending the University of Colorado, and later edited newspapers in Victor and Trinidad.

But his greatest love was the law, and in 1916 he opened a law office at Antonito, then, as now, an overwhelmingly Hispanic community.

"He became very close to many of them," says Robert Carr, the late governor's son. "He spoke Spanish, and he was their attorney. Whenever they had problems they came to him."

Carr also was familiar with a small Japanese-American community at La Jara, about 14 miles north of Antonito, says the younger Carr, a Denver attorney. "He couldn't see these people being tools of the emperor of Japan," Robert Carr says.

"People told a lot of racial type of humor in those days, and Dad would have similar jokes and use that terminology, so in a sense he was a part of his generation and understood it," says the younger Carr. "But every time it came to an actual decision, he always went the other way, so it was something he basically realized was wrong.

"When it came to anything dealing with a live human who was of a minority group, he cast that all aside and—what was rather unusual at that time—went on just what the merits (of the case) were, without being colored by the racial and ethnic thing.

"His actions were different from what one might expect from the words and terminology of the day."

Robert Carr describes his father as "somewhat of a renegade Republican. Fiscally, he was conservative, but human rights-wise, he was not. . . . He took things in the Constitution quite seriously—that all men are created equal and have equal rights before the law."

By 1929, Ralph Carr was U.S. Attorney in the Hoover administration. He was a prominent Denver lawyer in 1938 when he was elected governor. He was re-elected in 1940, after bringing the state budget into line and winning praise for preventing violence during a tense labor dispute.

Long before his stand on Japanese-Americans, Carr gained a reputation for stating his position on controversial issues, and he was used to equally blunt responses.

Several city councils passed resolutions urging Carr to behave like the other governors towards the relocation. Denver City Councilman H.C. Dolph said, "I am opposed to any Japanese being brought into the state for any reason."

Carr's decision to hire a Japanese-American housekeeper raised eyebrows. He chose a woman who had been forced to interrupt her studies at the University of California. She was able to complete her degree at the University of Denver while working for the governor, his son recalls. When she graduated, he hired another housekeeper from Amache.

One neighbor wondered how the governor slept at night, knowing his family was under the same roof as a Japanese.

"That was the hysteria of the times," Robert Carr says.

Ralph Carr was not the only one who behaved courageously. The Rocky Mountain News gave him guarded support. The Denver Council of Churches was outspokenly supportive, and many Colorado school teachers reminded pupils not to harass their Japanese-American classmates.

But many Coloradans saw every Oriental as a Japanese spy and bitterly opposed Carr's stand. A Denver woman, in a letter to The Denver Post, charged that Colorado was becoming a "dumping ground' for "sneaking Japs."

"If California wants to get rid of them, why not dump them in the ocean?" she asked.

The News ran a wire-service story about how to distinguish Chinese from Japanese. A man identified as "one of America's best-known anthropologists" explained that Japanese "have a clever, smarter expression, the reflection of their materialistic and commercial interests," while Chinese faces are "mild and friendly and interesting."

In Julesburg, a man identified as "a cowboy and one-time Indian-fighter" announced that "Japs is just like Injuns." He was pictured holding a Bowie knife in a Rocky Mountain News spread.

A Weld County woman known to her neighbors as Rattlesnake Kate said she was prepared to take on the Japanese with shotgun, rifle or club.

Eventually, the hysteria died down. Late in 1942, merchants in Lamar began erecting signs welcoming trade with the 8,000 Japanese-Americans at the Amache camp, who were granted frequent leaves.

"They found out that Japanese people are very quiet, and not only that, Japanese were the biggest spenders," said Torizawa.

But Carr's political career was over.

He lost a bid to unseat U.S. Senator Ed C. "Big Ed" Johnson, who earlier had suggested Carr use the National Guard to keep the Japanese-Americans out of Colorado. The margin was about two votes per precinct, and some historians say Carr's stand on the Japanese Americans could have made the difference.

Carr later won a seat on the CU Board of Regents. The heart attack that killed him occurred during a campaign to regain the state house.

Coloradan Stood on Principle

Congress and the Western governors issued belated apologies recently to the 120,000 Japanese-Americans who were driven from their homes on the West Coast amid public hysteria following the attack on Pearl Harbor.

But few people remembered former Colorado Gov. Ralph Carr, the only one of 10 Western governors who agreed to accept the Japanese refugees who streamed eastward from California during the spring and summer of 1942.

To their shame, the governors of nine other Western states told the refugees to keep moving, and local vigilante groups were all too willing to enforce the order. Japanese-Americans were barred from restaurants and were assaulted on the streets. The possessions of one refugee family were set on fire in Arizona.

Even President Franklin Roosevelt fell victim to the hysteria. On Feb. 21, 1942, Roosevelt ordered the Army to round up Japanese-Americans who would not leave their homes voluntarily. The victims were packed into railroad cars and shipped to camps as far away as Arkansas.

Carr was among a handful of Americans—and possibly the only elected official—who remembered that the Constitution applied to Japanese-Americans. Three days after the attack on Pearl Harbor, he appealed to Coloradan's not to molest people of Japanese descent. "We cannot test the degree of a man's affection for his country by the birthplace of his grandfather," Carr said in a radio address.

When the federal government decided to locate a concentration camp for Japanese-Americans near Lamar, Carr shocked some of his Denver neighbors by hiring an internee as his housekeeper. He chose a young woman who had been forced to interrupt her studies at the University of California. She completed her degree at the University of Denver while working for the governor.

Carr paid a political price for his stand. Protests came from the Denver and Greeley city councils, as well as from ordinary citizens. Some historians believe his stand on the rights of the Japanese was the factor in his losing a close race for the U.S. Senate later in 1942.

Carr, a Republican, reflected a branch of conservatism that read the Constitution as a guarantee of individual liberties. According to people who knew him, Carr had the ability—unusual in the more prejudiced days of a half-century ago—to view people as individuals, regardless of race.

Carr died of a heart attack in 1950. Japanese-Americans erected a bust of Carr in Sakura Square in 1974. The same year, a plaque commemorating him was dedicated outside the governor's office in the state Capitol.

Since the fanfare surrounding those events, Carr has returned to obscurity. He is not part of the public school curriculum because even most educators have never heard of him.

The 100th anniversary of Carr's birth occurs on Dec. 11. No public commemoration is planned. Amid the self-congratulation we are heaping upon ourselves in this year of the Constitution's Bicentennial, we would do well to remember a man who risked his career for the Bill of Rights.

VISUAL ARTISTS RIGHTS LEGISLATION

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, on August 7, I introduced H.R. 3221, the Visual Artists Rights Act of 1987. Senator KENNEDY introduced similar legislation in the other body.

The chairman and president of the Independent Committee on Arts Policy, Schuyler Chapin and Alberta Arthurs, have published a lucid and compelling article on this legislation and the needs it addresses. The piece by Mr. Chapin and Ms. Arthurs, published in today's New York Times, is a valuable and welcome contribution to national discussion on the protection of artists and the fostering of the arts. I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 29, 1987]

A BILL OF RIGHTS FOR ARTS

(By Schuyler Chapin and Alberta Arthurs)

Last fall, Jasper Johns's painting "Out the Window" was auctioned for $3.6 million, the highest sum ever paid for a work by a living artist. The painting had been acquired in 1960 for $2,250. None of the $3.6 million went to the artist.

A private collector purchased a work, two figures lying on a bed with soiled sheets, by the sculptor George Segal. The buyer subsequently removed the figures from the bed and placed them on a pedestal. The buyer ignored all letters from the sculptor protesting this mutilation, including one in which Mr. Segal offered to buy the piece back.

Both of these stories reflect something unique to the visual arts as compared with other arts. Because these works of art are original, ownable pieces of property, there is a complete severing of the artist's connection to his or her work once it is sold. In this country, the right of private property takes precedence over artists' moral or economic rights.

A bill that maintains a connection between a visual artist and that artist's work has been initiated by Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, and introduced in both houses of Congress. This connection is one we already recognize with reproducible works of art, and is a link central to the incentive and protection we as a society grant to artists.

Called the Visual Artists Rights Act of 1987, the bill has two primary objectives: to secure the rights of visual artists to prevent the intentional mutilation or destruction of their work, and to provide for resale royalties.

This simple and rather modest bill elicits impassioned arguments. It requires a fundamental examination of attitudes our society holds about the nature of art; who benefits from art, what its value is and what value we place on those who create it. From this broader perspective, the Visual Artists Rights Act is a very important piece of legislation, and its passage could be a milestone in the cultural maturation of America.

The artists and arts leaders in the Independent Committee on Arts Policy examined this bill and the detailed arguments for and against it. Our decision to support the bill came after rigorous debate and analysis.

Art—physical, tangible, visual art—is more than a piece of property that some one or some institution owns. And, yes, it is even more than a valuable commodity with one of the highest rates of return on the market.

Works of art are much more than that. In some real way they belong to no one because they belong to all of us. They are among the most salient examples of the breadth and depth and complexity of human nature.

Throughout time, our species has used the arts—this richer set of symbols that only humans have devised—to transmit the heritage of people and to express most profoundly their deepest human joys, sorrows and intuitions. "Art," Elliot Eisner has said, "helps us know what we cannot articulate."

This bill says that the country wants the owners of art to protect what they have for all of us and for posterity. We don't want owners—either intentionally or through gross negligence—to mutilate or destroy what they own. We don't want Blue Cross and Blue Shield, for example, to paint John Raimondi's red sculpture "Blue Cross blue."

This bill says that we value the vision of the artist. It says that those gifted with the insight, imagination and inventiveness to create fine art are due recognition and protection from Congress.

And because we value artists and value what they do, when their works command handsome prices on the resale market, we think it only fair that some small portion of that profit return to the originator, the creator, the artist.

Opponents of this bill say that the thriving art resale market, known to be in the billions (Sotheby's recently announced record worldwide sales of $1.3 billion, and Christie's sales were just short of another billion) is so delicate that an artist royalty would be a significant deterrent to trade, thereby hurting artists instead of helping them. Investors will be so repelled by the added cost, the bill's opponents say, that they will buy and sell outside the United States or go underground.

Although comments of this sort are not surprising, the truth is that the Kennedy bill is a very reasonable proposal. The artist would be entitled to 7 percent of the appreciated value of the work, provided that the resale price is more than 150 percent of the original price and that the work cost more than $1,000 to begin with.

There are many indicators that belie the "delicacy of the market" argument. Investors have not balked, for example, at the 10 percent buyer's premium imposed by auction houses. And new York City has continued to be the art commerce capital of the world, despite our whopping sales tax of 8.25 percent.

The issue is something larger than marketplace friction. It has to do with that connection between artists and their work that we want to recognize. It has to do with knowing that the artist is the indispensable element here. And it has to do with a kind of elemental fairness intrinsic to our American values.

Ideas, even good ideas, have a hard time surviving without strong support. The Independent Committee on Arts Policy tenaciously supports and endorses this bill, applauds the senators and representatives who are working for its passage, and urges all Americans to recognize its vital importance.

BOTTLE INDUSTRY IN WASHINGTON SPREADS FALSE INFORMATION ABOUT ONEONTA, NY

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, this morning's Washington Post carries a story that goes to the heart of many Americans' complaints about big business and their attitude toward the environment. In short, the highly paid lawyers and lobbyists in this town have learned too well how to twist the facts to fight just about any measure for a cleaner, safer environment.

This time the industry lobbyists are smearing the reputation of a small town that I happen to have the privilege of representing, and we won't stand for it.

The people of Oneonta, NY, population 14,000, are proud to live in the heart of some of the most beautiful country in the entire Nation. From the rolling foothills of the Catskills, to the nearby headwaters of the Susquehanna River at a lake they call Glimmerglass for its sparkling, light blue color—from the dozens of family farms to Oneonta's old-fashioned Main street—this is a land cherished for its rich history, its wildlife, and its four-season beauty. The community's high standards are attracting new businesses and new families.

Along come the highly paid lobbyists fighting a proposed bottle bill in Washington, DC. Calling themselves the "Clean Capital City Committee," they're spending millions to convince D.C. voters that bottle deposits are a costly waste of time. They even put an ad on TV that says a State bottle bill led to the closing of Oneonta's "recycling center." Now, they say: "the town's a little on the messy side again."

The biggest problem is, that's a lie. In New York, we know a bottle bill brings a cleaner, safer environment for everyone—we passed a bottle bill in 1982. In fact, the city of Oneonta began a recycling program a year before the State passed its bottle bill.

The State bottle bill had no effect on that recycling program, which is still in effect today, with strong support from the local residents, despite predictable and manageable glitches. Forget the story told by lobbyists. Bottles are not—I repeat, not—piling up in the streets or polluting the community.

We've seen this tactic used elsewhere, as when a group called Citizens for Sensible Control of Acid Rain called folks on the phone, gave them the name of the group, and said pending acid rain legislation would cost them $110 billion. This is a whopper of a big fish story, or perhaps I should say dead fish.

C-SCAR, as they're called, spent $3 million of utility company money on that campaign last year, one of the highest dollar amounts by any group for any lobbying effort in 1986. Considering the deceptive stories they spread, it's not surprising that many of my colleagues are disgusted with such stonewalling tactics.

It's about time for a more responsible attitude toward our environment from the industries that affect it most. In the long run, their economic health will be better ensured by finding ways to coordinate economic growth with environmental protection.

And it's time for an apology from the Clean Capital City Committee to the proud, clean, safe community of Oneonta, NY.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to reprint the article from the Washington Post below:

MESSY N.Y. TOWN CRIES FOUL OVER BOTTLE INDUSTRY AD HERE: DEPOSIT BILL DIDN'T HALT ONEONTA RECYCLING

(By Ed Bruske)

Time was, says a voice as smooth as cornsilk, when Oneonta, N.Y., had a recycling center where folks brought their bottles and cans and kept the town clean. But then the state passed a bottle deposit law, "and the recycling center shut down." Now, the voice continues, "the town's a little on the messy side again."

That's the message of one of several radio advertisements that have been airing in the Washington area on behalf of a beverage industry coalition trying to defeat a D.C. ballot measure that would require deposits on bottles and cans sold in the District.

Yesterday in Oneonta—the 14,000-population upstate New York town featured in the antideposit commercial—town officials had this response: Wrong.

"From what I've heard, it doesn't sound accurate at all," said City Clerk Elizabeth Goodman.

Said Mayor David Brenner: "They ought to check around before they say things like that."

Officials in Oneonta said passage of a deposit law in the state in 1982—legislation similar to the measure that will appear on D.C. ballots Tuesday as Initiative 28—had no effect on recycling there.

They said recycling has continued to run strong in Oneonta—and perhaps more so—since deposits were required.

"What you've got is a lot of people collecting bottles for extra money, like old folks and Boy Scouts," Goodman said. "It really works the other way."

So what did happen in Oneonta?

According to the industry advertisement, sponsored by the industry-funded Clean Capital City Committee, "Once folks were forced to take their bottles and cans back to the grocery, our recycling center went out of business."

Bruno Bruni, assistant city engineer in Oneonta, said there never was a recycling center, exactly, in Oneonta. Rather, about a year before the state deposit bill was passed, the city and surrounding township started a recycling program, contracting for help from a local center for the mentally handicapped to collect and process glass bottles. Bruni said the city built eight sheds around town where residents could drop off all kinds of glass bottles and jars.

The city also constructed a building on a local railway siding where the glass was stored until it could be crushed each month and loaded onto fright cars for shipment to a glass manufacturer in Elmira, N.Y.

There was an overall community concern about recycling as many products as we could, rather than putting them in a landfill," said Bruni, adding that the city has been forced under a consent decree with the state to close its public landfill by next June because it is full.

About two years into the program, though—or a year after the state deposit bill passed—the city employee responsible for coordinating with the handicapped group left his job and was not replaced, Bruni said. The city's contract with the center for the handicapped lapsed and was not renewed when problems arose over whether the center was paying its workers minimum wage.

However, Oneonta residents have continued to leave glass not covered by the deposit law in the town receptacles, and the city still collects it. City workers process the glass—though less frequently—and lately the glass has been piling up at the processing building because the crusher broke down. Mayor Brenner said the city plans to get it fixed soon.

"We take issue with that kind of message because the citizenry has been very good about sending the products down," Brenner said. "It's not left in the streets, nor is it making the community any dirtier."

Ed Arnold, spokesman for Clean Capital City, said yesterday that he would respond to questions about the commercial after he obtained a transcript of it. He later was unavailable for comment.

Oneonta Clerk Goodman was not pleased. "We would like to be a model community and not be featured in somebody's disaster ad," she said. "I wish they'd be good enough to send us a copy of the ad."

PROTECT VICTIMS OF FRAUD

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. CONYERS, Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter into the RECORD testimony that I gave today before the Senate Judiciary on one of the most important consumer and antifraud issues today: civil RICO reform.

Civil RICO is important to victims of fraud and for deterring antisocial and fraudulent practices in commerce. Yet special interests today are urging with unconvincing reasons that the tool be weakened. That's a bad idea. I urge my colleagues to take note.

PREPARED TESTIMONY OF HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR., CHAIRMAN, HOUSE JUDICIARY SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL JUSTICE BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY ON CIVIL RICO

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1987

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you for providing me the opportunity to testify today on an issue of considerable importance to me, to law enforcement and victims of crime: civil RICO.

The hearings now could not be more timely given recent events on Wall Street. For all the differing explanations of the stock market decline boil down to one essential point: that investor confidence is critical to market stability.

And while the budget and trade deficits appear clearly the major factors, the perception of corruption on Wall Street during the past year cannot be ignored as having contributed to an erosion in investor confidence. Already we are seeing in just these past two weeks small investors being blocked out of the market. Scores of lawsuits are expected to be filed. The system certainly now needs reinforcement with law that will impose and maintain integrity.

That is an appropriate starting point for discussing civil RICO. For in my judgment the basic issue is that white collar crime and fraud are of scandalous proportions, costing over $200 billion annually, and current law and law enforcement efforts—both private and public—and incommensurate to the nature and scope of the problem. Very little money defrauded is ever returned to victims and in my view civil RICO and other antifraud laws that protect citizens need strengthening, not weakening.

Civil RICO was enacted in 1970 as part of a comprehensive effort to fight organized and white collar crime. Its essential purpose was to help underresourced public prosecutors by giving citizens a "private attorney general function"—the right to sue crooks and cheats that defraud them for treble damages.

Today fraud and corruption have grown to proportions never imagined in 1970. Securities fraud is estimated to cost up to $50 billion annually, bank fraud to account for up to half of all the bank failures, and insurance fraud is estimated to cost at least $14 billion annually. Never before has the daily news been so dominated by reports of insider trading and corruption scandals.

Yet today those that oppose civil RICO—largely special business interests—make an extraordinary argument that the danger lies in the law itself, that despite the fact that less than one percent of monies defrauded the public are ever recovered, civil RICO is too tough a law, and too far reaching. The arguments are outdated and unconvincing and include the following:

1. Civil RICO litigation is flooding the federal courts: Data collected by the Administrative Office of the Courts show clearly that civil RICO is not flooding the courts, that out of a 23,000 civil filings monthly only 90—approximately .0003% of the total docket—are civil RICO cases, 60% of which have an independent basis for federal jurisdiction. A respected federal judge in California, Judge Pamela Rymer, with extensive experience in RICO litigation observes that the RICO filings have "calmed down" and actually "present no greater problem than antitrust or complicated securities cases."

2. Civil RICO is used frivolously in ordinary commercial disputes". Since the Supreme Court's decision on the intended scope of RICO in Sedima in July of 1985—and at the invitation of the Court to tighten the standards for RICO litigation—the Circuit Courts of Appeal have made clear that RICO only applies to systematic "patterns" of serious criminal conduct with multiple objectives. While RICO reformers point to trivial instances in which RICO cases have been attempted (domestic disputes, church members, F.B.I. sting operations, etc.) those cases are nearly always dismissed and few if any are today being brought.

The more typical and important application of RICO in commercial disputes include the use by IBM Corporation for theft of software by Hitachi Ltd., a suit settled for upward of $200 million. The trustee of the Home State Savings Bank also used RICO to sue auditors of E.S.M. Government Securities, Inc. for the injuries that Ohio bank depositors suffered when E.S.M.'s insolvency was fraudulently hidden from investors in a bribery-secured favorable audit report, a suit that was settled for $80 million. Other victims—including businesses—that have sued under RICO include Standard Oil Indiana, Armco Steel, The Bankers Trust and Co. and Allstate Insurance Company. RICO is, in short, neither pro-business nor anti-business. It is pro-victim.

3. RICO was intended to apply only to "racketeers" of the classic Edward G. Robinson mold of "Little Ceasar". The Supreme Court in Sedima ruled that RICO does and should apply to "any person" and that legitimate businesses "enjoy neither an inherent incapacity for criminal activity nor immunity from its consequences." A recent survey of 1043 businesses reinforces the important point. It showed that between 1970 and 1980 117 businesses had significant convictions or consent decrees for 98 antitrust violations, 28 cases of kickbacks, bribes or illegal rebates, 21 instances of illegal contributions, 11 cases of fraud, and 5 cases of tax evasion. The $200 billion annual price tag rivals only drug traffic and the fight against it is being largely lost.

The RICO "reform" effort has now abandoned its original goal of the essential repeal of the law with a prior criminal conviction recognizing the inability to justify such a rollback in the midst of an insider trading scandal and corruption climate. The newest reform effort I believe is still unjustified given the scope of the fraud problem and it is insufficient. That is why I urge you, Mr. Chairman, to consider working with me on the House side to redraft civil RICO legislation that would toughen the law where needed and make appropriate reforms where real abuses or unintended uses occur. Let me comment first on what I consider the inadequacy of the current reform effort as embodied in S. 1523.

The bill first fails to put new protections where needed. Bank fraud for instance is estimated to account for up to half of all bank failures for instance. There are new expectations today that the withdrawal of capital and collateral will precipitate new bank failures in institutions already vulnerable because of fraud.

The bill does nothing about toxic waste offenses. The National Association of Attorney's General support the concept of making a series of toxic waste offenses predicate acts under RICO. Estimates show that as much as 90% of toxic wastes put annually into 170,000 pits, ponds, lagoons and landfills are disposed improperly. The contamination of drinking water of entire communities is of scandalous proportions.

The bill also does nothing about terrorism, including domestic terrorism. Civil Rights organizations and the work of the Judiciary Subcommittee that I chair have shown shocking increases in anti-semitic and racist acts of violence and terror. With an international service of process, personal injury in cases when violence results, parens patriae RICO could be appropriately used for terrorism. Legislation that I have introduced on the House side includes bank fraud, toxic waste offenses, terrorism and other acts as predicate offenses under RICO.

My second category of concerns center around the weakening provisions of the bill. If the bill is too broadly used, (which I no longer believe it is) then the pattern of predicate acts should be amended to constrain its proper use. But it does not follow that remedies should be changed for that cripples the effectiveness of RICO as an important deterrent and as a victims rights measure.

S. 1523 first deprives businesses of the opportunity to sue for treble damages thereby eliminating one of civil RICO's most important aspects: deterrence. Actual damages in business suits are also insufficient to recover real losses such as lost investment opportunities. It also creates new burdens of proof for private citizens—seniors cheated out of home improvement funds for instance—to recover punitive damages.

The bill also has basically unfair provisions for retroactivity: changing the rules of the game for those who are in the middle of playing it. I believe conceptually that retroactivity is unfair and bad policy.

One would have thought that the level of outrage following the successive revelations of multimillion dollar insider trading scandals would prompt tougher laws, or at least discourage attempts to weaken existing ones. Not so.

The special favors for the securities industry is also unsound and unwarranted. There is no indication that current securities law is adequate to deal with the scope of the $50 billion annual securities fraud problem and every indication that civil RICO is a deterrent: that's why Boesky pleaded guilty not to securities fraud or a RICO predicate offense but to a non-RICO predicate offense. And with the recent Supreme Court decision in Mcmahon in which the Court ruled that arbitration could be compelled, and with the expected ruling on "misappropriation" in Winans, civil RICO especially under the reform bill will have increasingly few uses in the securities field. There should be no exemption.

Provisions that bar treble damages unless the defendant has a prior criminal conviction of a RICO predicate act I believe are unwise: that gives prosecutors too great and too unfair a bargaining chip.

Neither other federal fraud laws which intervene in limited instances and provide generally for actual damages, nor current state law is adequate to deal the character of fraud in our modern society. That's why key elements of the law enforcement community—the National Association of Attorney's General, the head of New York's Organized Crime Task Force—have called not for weakening the law but for strengthening it. They know from experience that public prosecutors do not have the resources to deal with the scope of the problem.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Civil RICO in my judgment should never be used in certain instances: labor-management disputes, landlord or marital disputes. Any amendments to the statute should reflect that.

2. If there are today instances that we can identify RICO's inappropriate use—for two phone calls or two pieces of mail; to chill First Amendment rights of an individual or organization—then we should deal with those by clarifying the pattern of predicate acts and requiring specificity in pleadings. But there is no compelling logic to change the remedies available and their important deterrent effects, there is no need to roll back the rights and remedies of individuals and small businesses.

3. Civil RICO and its current remedies should be maintained given the nature and scope of the fraud problem as we can currently identify it. There is further ample rationale for making as predicate acts invidious types of crime: new kinds of complex fraud, hate violence, toxic waste offenses.

4. I also urge that this committee undertake together with or separate from the House Judiciary Subcommittee which I chair comprehensive and systematic hearings on the nature of fraud and its scope, the ability of public and private law enforcement efforts in dealing with it, and then address the appropriate changes in fraud statutes in that context. I urge against revisions in anti-fraud law studied outside the context of the problem itself.

The RICO "reform" movement of today calls to mind similar efforts in the 1930's directed at the Securities Act of 1933, which were described by Justice, then professor, Frankfurter:

"The leading financial law firms who have been systematically carrying on a campaign against this Act have been seeking—now that they and their financial clients have come out of their storm cellar of fear—not to improve but to chloroform the Act. They evidently assume that the public is unaware of the sources of the issues that represent the boldest abuses of fiduciary responsibility * * *."

That is true today and we need more protections, not less.

LONG ISLANDERS OPPOSE SHOREHAM

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak of a crisis of confidence. Headline after headline in recent weeks has reported that the American people are concerned that the administration is failing to exert the kind of leadership which is necessary to take this Nation forward.

Today there was an opportunity for this administration to reassert its leadership in a manner that would have conclusively demonstrated to the citizens of Long Island, NY, that their concern over the crisis of confidence is not warranted, at least with respect to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission [NRC].

When the opportunity presented itself today, the President essentially told the people of Long Island to drop dead.

This afternoon, the NRC threw out its 7-year-old rule, and imposed a new, less restrictive rule, which will eliminate State and local participation in approval of evacuation plans. President Reagan, pledged in writing to the people of Long Island, that his administration would not impose an evacuation plan for Shoreham over State and local objections.

If leadership, commitment, and his word, had any value to the President, he would have called the NRC and directed them not to adopt this outrageous rule, because it violates the clearly stated policy commitment of his administration.

My words today should not come as a surprise to the President, or Vice President, because last week I personally delivered 15,000 signatures to the White House, from citizens of my district, calling on the President to keep his word.

The people of Long Island historically provide the largest plurality of votes for Republican Presidential candidates of any two counties in the Nation. In politics, giving one's word is sacred. The people of Long Island once accepted the administration's solemn commitment on this vital issue. Eighty percent of the people in my district oppose Shoreham, and, Mr. Speaker, we are outraged over the violation of this commitment.

JEWS FROM ARAB COUNTRIES ASK FOR JUSTICE

HON. BARNEY FRANK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, one unfortunate and often forgotten injustice that has resulted from the Arab-Israeli conflict is the hardships faced by Jews who have fled from Arab lands. We often overlook the fact that hundreds of thousands of Jews were forced to flee their homelands under extreme pressure and duress, often leaving behind their homes and other possessions. This past week, the World Organization of Jews from Arab Countries [WOJAC] convened its third international conference in Washington, DC to discuss the interests of Jews from Arab countries. WOJAC has come to the United States to appeal for assistance for Jews who continue to be held hostage, particularly in Yemen, Syria, and Iraq; for recognition for the right to compensation for their private property and their cultural and religious assets left behind; and to call on Arab countries to end human rights abuses against their Jewish populations.

Mr. Speaker, I was visited by a delegation from the WOJAC conference and was impressed by the strength of their arguments. I ask that a description of the WOJAC and a resolution of the Israel Knesset on the occasion of the WOJAC convention in Washington be included in the RECORD, for the benefit of my colleagues, at this point.

WHAT IS WOJAC?

PURPOSE

Established in 1975, WOJAC (the World Organization of Jews from Arab Countries) seeks to represent the interests of over two million Jews from Arab countries now living throughout the world, the majority of them in Israel, where they make up approximately 44% of the population.

WOJAC came into being because of the widespread belief among Jews originating from Arab countries, that the time had come to raise the long neglected issue of their legitimate rights and claims against their countries of origin: most of them fled these countries or were forced to leave them, in the wake of humiliation, persecution, imprisonments and executions.

CHARACTER AND STRUCTURE

WOJAC is an independent, voluntary, international, non-governmental and a-political organization.

WOJAC has been approved as a NGO (Non-Governmental Organization) for association with the United Nations Department of Public Information.

The Organization includes:

The ISRAEL COUNCIL (120-150 members)—leaders of the associations representing the communities of immigrants from eight Arab Countries in Asia and Africa, as well as eminent public figures in Israel;

The ISRAELI EXECUTIVE (26 members)—carries out policies of Council.

The GENERAL MEETING (80-100 delegates)—elected every 4 years by the Israel Council and WOJAC Chapters abroad; supreme organ of WOJAC:

WORLD EXECUTIVE (23 members from eight countries, including 12 from Israel)—elected by General Meeting, sets up standing committees and defines their powers, appoints treasurer and director-general and defines terms, conditions, functions and powers of their office;

The PRESIDIUM (7 members, including 4 from Israel)—executive organ of World Executive functions in accordance with its resolutions.

Heading the organization are:

Mr. Leon Tamman of Britain, who serves as Chairman of the Presidium; and Mr. Mordechai Ben-Porat, former Minister of the State of Israel, who is Chairman of the World Executive. They exchange roles annually.

Membership is open to Jews from Arab countries and their descendants, as well as to anyone who identifies with its aims and wishes to participate in its activities in Israel and abroad.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IN WASHINGTON

WOJAC, in presenting its case to American public opinion, appeals to the American People's innate sense of fairness and traditional quest for justice. Its Third International Conference will be held in Washington, D.C., at the Omni Shoreham Hotel, between the 26-28 October 1987, under the sponsorship and with the assistance of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, as well as other American and international Jewish organizations.

The objectives of the Conference are:

1. Rights of Jews in Arab Countries—To act for the Jews held hostage in Arab countries to be permitted to leave and, up to such time, to have their civil and human rights respected.

WOJAC does not include all Arab states in one category, but draws a distinction between countries where Jews live in distress, and one or two Arab states whose attitude towards their Jewish citizens is relatively liberal.

2. Rights of Jews from Arab Countries—To win recognition for the right to compensation of the Jews who left Arab countries and were dispossessed of their private and communal property, and to ensure the salvaging of their cultural and religious assets.

3. Refugees—To win recognition, by the United States Administration and Congress of the de facto exchange of populations that occurred in the Middle East when some 600,000 out of the 850,000 Jews who left the Arab lands settled in the State of Israel, while a similar number of Palestinian Arabs left Israel to live in Arab states.

To get the Arab states to absorb and integrate the Palestinian Arab refugees in their midst, just as Israel has absorbed and rehabilitated the Jewish refugees from Arab countries at the cost of over $11 billion despite its difficult economic situation.

To support any Arab, Israeli, international or private initiatives for the development of Judea, Samaria and Gaza, that will result in a better quality of life for the Arab refugees within these areas, irrespective of the final political solution.

The Conference will examine the extent to which the vast experience and knowledge of the Jews from Arab countries regarding the lands of their origin could be utilized to help achieve greater understanding between Israel and the Arab countries, and to seek to ensure that any peace settlement will endure.

WOJAC has already held two previous international conferences: its Founding Conference took place in Paris in November 1975, followed by the Second International Conference which convened in London in November 1983.

A CALL TO THE ARAB STATES

WOJAC calls on the Arab states—

(a) To initiate a new era of peace and brotherhood between Jews and Arabs—the offspring of the same Biblical Patriarch, Abraham—on the basis of the full and fearless recognition of historical facts and legal and moral rights with reference to both sides of the dispute;

(b) To cease immediately the persecution of the Jews still living in their countries, to grant these Jews civil and human rights, including the freedom to leave, if they so desire.

(c) To fulfill their legal and moral obligations towards the Jews, including compensation for the expropriation of their property and for damages and losses suffered in their countries of origin;

(d) To return to Jewish hands the Jewish religious and cultural assets under their control, after restoration and repair;

(e) To guarantee Jews free access to sites holy to them in Arab countries;

(f) To desist from the exploitation of the Arab refugee issue for political and propaganda purposes.

(g) To absorb their brethren, the Arab refugees, in their midst, within the vast areas under their rule, just as Israel has absorbed and rehabilitated Jews who had come from Arab countries.

KNESSET RESOLUTION CONCERNING JEWS FROM ARAB COUNTRIES

1. The Knesset sends greetings to the Third International Conference of the World Organization of Jews from Arab Countries, convening in Washington today.

2. After hundreds—perhaps thousands—of years of Jewish life marked by significant cultural and economic contributions to their surroundings, the establishment of the State of Israel served to bolster both the yearning for Zion among the Jews of the Arab countries and also the manifestations of hostility and violence towards them. The Knesset hails the instances of human courage that characterized the aliya to Israel of Jews from Arab and Islamic lands. The Knesset also notes the liberal attitude of Morocco towards its Jews.

3. Most of the Jews from Arab countries came to Israel penniless, leaving behind in those countries a rich cultural heritage and much personal property. Even at this late date, with their integration in the life of the state an accomplished fact, the Knesset determines that they must receive compensation from the Arab states for their property of which they were forcibly deprived, or which was confiscated, frozen, or nationalized, and for the persecution they were made to suffer; and that the Arab states must return to the Jewish communities the cultural and religious objects and artifacts of which they have been deprived.

4. Israel, for its part, has made it known that, within the framework of a peace settlement, it will be prepared to compensate the Arabs who left Israel. In the talks concerning this compensation, the rights of the Jews who were compelled to leave the Arab states and abandon their property will be taken into account.

5. The Knesset expresses its deep concern for the fate of the Jews remaining in Arab and Islamic lands, and calls upon the Government, the countries of the world and world public opinion to continue to act to safeguard their rights and their freedom.

IN MEMORY OF THEODORE PRAHINSKI

HON. ALBERT G. BUSTAMANTE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I rise to pay tribute to a great and kind man whose service to country and to the District of Columbia will long be remembered in the executive agencies of our Federal Government, the committees in Congress, and in the city council chamber and District government buildings. Mr. Theodore (Ted) Prahinski passed away suddenly on October 23, 1987.

Ted Prahinski was one of those rare breed of civil servants known as a Government patent attorney. Patent attorney's are unique in that they are schooled in both the fields of engineering and law, and Ted was one of the more innovative members of that arcane profession.

Since 1972, Ted served on the staff of the Office of Judge Advocate, Air Force Systems Command Headquarters at Andrews Air Force Base. There he became recognized for his expertise in developing legal options concerning technology transfer problems, including proprietary rights in technical data, the protection against disclosure of weapons-related data from Freedom of Information Act requests, and export controls and security classifications of technical data. In short, his work helped to pioneer new concepts in intellectual property law that blended with Congress' mandate to achieve greater competition in the Department of Defense's acquisition procedures and protected U.S. military and economic interests in the design and development of new weapons systems, items, components, and processes.

Ted also served on the Defense Acquisition Regulatory Council Subcommittee that was responsible for drafting regulations covering government/government contractor rights in technical data and computer software. In fact, it was on this very same subject that I came to know Ted Prahinski during the brief working relationship we developed. At my request, Ted worked with my office in refining language on the technical data rights provision contained in the DOD authorization bill for fiscal years 1988-89. His assistance was invaluable, and fortunately several of his ideas and suggestions were incorporated into the provisions amending the "Rights in Technical Data" section under title 10 of the United States Code. This was an issue of immense interest to Ted, and he was working on suggestions for perfecting bill language up to the very moment of his death.

Mr. Speaker, I relate this story not because he was providing this Member of Congress with the benefit of his knowledge and advice on a very technical issue. I share this experience with my colleagues because it manifests the qualities and character, for which Ted would like to be remembered best—a loyal American, a dedicated patriot, and an eager servant to his country.

I extend my deepest sympathies to his wife, Mary, and his three children. I hope that they will take comfort in knowing that his contributions to shaping Government intellectual property policy will not be forgotten, and that his ideas for improving current policy will continue to live on.

DR. STEPHEN GLEASON'S STATEMENT ON THE PERFORMANCE OF THE PEER REVIEW ORGANIZATION

HON. DAVID R. NAGLE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. NAGLE. Mr. Speaker, today, I submit for the record a statement by Dr. Stephen Gleason of Des Moines, IA, regarding the performance of the Peer Review Organization [PRO] to be considered with modifications or amendments in the PRO laws as submitted in H.R. 2116. Dr. Gleason is currently the chairman of the Iowa Health Legislation Committee and chief medical officer of Mercy Hospital Medical Center in Des Moines, IA.

Dr. Gleason and members of the Iowa Health Legislation Committee have devoted a considerable amount of time in reviewing health care policies and their effect on rural America.

This statement by Dr. Gleason is a timely and appropriate comment on the effects that PRO has toward the accessibility to quality health care in rural America. More appropriate, however, is the effects of PRO on the medical system. I would like to thank Dr. Gleason for his time and concern and I commend this statement to you and my colleagues.

The statement follows:

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee: I am honored to have this opportunity to present a statement regarding Iowa's experience with the PRO review system and in support of the modification to the present PRO law addressed in H.R. 2116.

It is my understanding that the PRO issues which have surfaced in Iowa have also been reported to exist even more prevalently on a national level and are not a problem specific just to Iowa. It is, therefore, not my desire to criticize the capable staff of Iowa's PRO, but instead encourage you to look at the system under which providers and reviewers are courageously asked to function.

The process of medical peer review has historically been a somewhat unpredictable application of rules based on: 1) PRO established standards of care; 2) specific and general norms and policies; 3) specialty specific criteria; and, 4) other criteria such as those developed for highly specialized or controversial technology. All of these are generally influenced by societal trends and legal expectations. All have been created from the honest and well-meaning efforts of providers and public policymakers to establish measures of "value" and measures of "unacceptable error" in the health sciences. Also of note is the limited number of physicians who serve as review physicians in the peer review process and who have widely varying degrees of professional competence, clinical experience, and academic training. They are charged with the difficult task of sorting through these criteria and applying them fairly. The task and the responsibility is at times overwhelming.

It is, therefore, understandable that many providers report confusion over applications of policy and procedure guidelines and variations in opinions by physician reviewers locally. Although policies may not be specifically mandated by law, they may be included in individual and variable contractual agreements between HCFA and the State PRO's. Such inconsistencies put pressure on local PRO's to operate outside of acceptable uniform federal guidelines. The inexactness of the review process is, therefore, a natural consequence of:

1. Geographic variations in criteria for review.
2. Variations in local interpretation of the law.
3. Variations in PRO—HCFA contracts.
4. Variations in physician reviewer competence, bias, and diligence.
5. The rapidly evolving policies of PRO's which cause changes in reviewer and provider expectations.

The fact that the review process is such an immature science would support the need for a well developed "due process" with early involvement of an independent judiciary. It may be many years before all the kinks are out of the system. In the meantime our developing PRO system is setting practice patterns and practice norms that will forever effect the health and welfare of our nation. Such a system should be easily challenged and any punitive decisions should be allowed a lengthy hearing.

A statement submitted to this Committee on March 27, 1987 by the American Hospital Association on Implementation of the Peer Review Organization Program delineates areas within which many PRO's bear scrutiny and supports the belief that PRO problems are nationwide in scope.

Therefore, in support specifically of sections 6, 7, 9, and 10 of H.R. 2116, we believe it is critical that you be aware of the following areas of concern:

1. Focused Review: HCFA interpretations as to the intent of Federal law has resulted in inconsistent and uneven review of physicians and hospitals and results in clinically burdensome penalties which are not consistent with the severity of identified patterns of abuse. For example, a diagnosis which occurs frequently because of an epidemic disease may be reviewed more heavily even if no significant admission abuses can be documented. The PRO reviewing such cases are under pressure from HCFA to produce evidence of abuse and engage in a large and expensive paperwork exchange with reviewed physicians and do so with no evidence that quality of care is being positively affected. Consistent, reasonable interpretation of the Review Plan needs to be implemented, particularly in regard to the intensified focused review of specific DRG's or diagnoses in the absence of evidence that admission abuses occur. Such reviews focus on DRG's typically assigned to the aged, the chronically ill, and the frequently hospitalized patient and appear to be simply a cost containment mechanism. The PRO can determine the image of quality by their control of the review selection process, and as such, should be cautious not to develop incentives against caring for such groups. Therefore, early notification and debate of rules changes would allow challenge, discussion, and, if necessary, adaptation of the system toward improved patient care.

2. Inappropriate Retrospective Admission Denials: Even when the hospitalization of a patient is obviously medically necessary, denials may be generated by any one or more of the following technical circumstances: 1) medical record processing error; 2) inadvertent coding errors; 3) inexact PRO data bases; 4) failure to update the database in a timely manner to indicate review decision reversal; 5) delayed notification of policy or procedural changes; 6) retroactive application of new policies or criteria; 7) insufficient turnaround time for physician response; 8) delayed turnaround time for PRO response; 9) inadequate PRO mechanisms and staff available to handle the volume of denial activity in a timely manner; and, 10) the occasionally strained relationships between certain physicians and the PRO which hinder the meaningful exchange of information.

All of the above can be corrected through an educational process. Requiring personal and positive interaction between physicians and PRO's is particularly appropriate when minor problems exist. Establishing grievance procedures for physicians or consumers to challenge and correct obvious gliches in the system would promote a cooperative attitude and improve the accuracy of review. Effective communication at all levels must be encouraged for its lack thereof could be a major contributor to the mistrust which jeopardizes the system.

3. It is imperative to the ultimate success of any law which regulates and mandates peer review that the physician reviewers meet specific qualifications in regard to their understanding and application of medical peer review criteria. They must be willing to accept professional accountability for decisions rendered. These reviewers should exhibit the ability to analyze and interpret data, have the skills to make prudent and appropriate value judgements and be able to weigh circumstances logically and judiciously. They should not be physicians who are too inexperienced or too outdated to otherwise make a living. They should not have a chip on their shoulder or a hidden desire to be malicious. They should have the balanced demeanor of a judge. The peer review system should initiate appropriate educational activities which would inform health care providers of potential problems and implement corrective action for existing problems. Physicians who are not qualified to make appropriate evaluations of specialized care and those who have demonstrated prejudicial or biased decisions should not be allowed to participate as reviewers in the PRO process. Physicians who are under the scrutiny of a review system have a right to valid "peer" review and the physician who is contracted and reimbursed for conducting peer review must expect to be openly accountable to a higher authority for his or her decisions. I might, therefore, suggest that you further amend H.R. 2116 to include such standards and fully support section 10 precluding discriminatory review.

4. High quality, available and affordable health care is an expectation of our society and physicians find themselves caught between this expectation and their overwhelming obligation to conform to ever-increasing government policies, insurance regulations, and defensive posturing against rising legal liabilities. The accumulated effect of these factors has created an atmosphere in which the physician has shifted an inordinate amount of time to the procedural requirements of regulatory agencies at the expense of patient-centered activity. In addition, physicians and well-meaning PRO reviewers deplete resources sorting through the confusing array of quality and cost containment standards which vary from HMO's to insurers to government agencies. We must, therefore, guarantee that unnecessary reviews be eliminated—PRO's should focus on the real problem providers—and should attempt to standardize the process for all providers and consumers. Section 10 opens the door to less discriminatory policy. Further amendments to protect other forms of discrimination in the review process may be in order.

Finally, the debate continues unresolved within the medical community as to what constitutes comprehensive criteria to judge quality health care. In June of 1986, the AMA House of Delegates proposed the following definition of quality: "High quality care is treatment that improves patient's physical and emotional status as quickly as possible, promotes health and early treatment, involves patients in decision making, is given by practitioners sensitive to illness-related anxiety, is based on accepted medical principles, uses technology and other resources effectively, and is sufficiently documented in the medical records." In order to measure "quality care" as the present law intends, I would encourage you, in addition, to examine and evaluate the relationship between medical practice and patient outcome. In fact, outcome is much more important than "documentation" or other qualitative parameters which have a stronger potential for "reviewer bias" as a source of distortions in quality review data. We must, also, examine the accessibility and availability of the medical care system to determine, longitudinally, if our review and management systems are providing inappropriate incentives against seeking or providing quality care.

It is the solemn responsibility of the health care community and this Congress to provide realistic and appropriate guidelines in order to correct the inequities that interpretation of the present law have generated. Such ongoing modifications to the rules that guide our nation's health care system should not be viewed as an indictment of PRO designers, but instead should represent a prudent society's effort to improve upon and finetune applicable regulations. Thank you for the opportunity to present this statement in support of H.R. 2116. If you or members of the subcommittee have any questions, I will be glad to respond.

ANTIDRUG ABUSE LAW ENACTED 1 YEAR AGO THIS WEEK

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago this week the Omnibus Anti-Drug Abuse Act was signed into law by the President, signaling the opening salvo of a new and renewed effort to rid our Nation of the scourge of drug abuse.

As a member of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime, I was gratified that several initiatives on which the subcommittee had been working—such as prohibitions on money laundering and designer drugs; increased penalties for drug trafficking; and assistance to State and local antidrug efforts—became the centerpiece of the landmark antidrug legislation. And, I am encouraged at the progress that is being made by Federal, State and local agencies in implementing the act.

In this connection, I am pleased and proud to report that earlier this week the school system of the Archdiocese of Louisville received an award here in Washington for the exemplary drug and alcohol abuse prevention program it has undertaken. Father Joseph Merkt and his staff are to be commended for the fine job they are doing for the young people of the Louisville Archdiocese.

I hope that we are able to keep important antidrug initiatives on track in the face of current budgetary uncertainties. The future of our Nation's greatest resource—our children and youth—could depend on it.

CAPT. JOHN HUNT'S SACRIFICE

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on October 16, 1987, the United States-flag oil tanker the Sea Isle City was struck by an Iranian launched Silkworm missile. This heinous attack caused severe injury to an American citizen, Capt. John Hunt, by blinding him, probably permanently.

Captain Hunt exemplifies the type of courageous individual the United States needs to support our defense sealift needs. As a member of the merchant marine he did not have to place himself in the middle of a conflict such as this. However, Captain Hunt realized that U.S. merchant ships should be allowed to travel anywhere they need in international waters. Therefore, he volunteered his considerable expertise to help lead U.S. tankers through a very dangerous area of the world.

Today, we who are safe in the United States often fail to appreciate the great risks individuals face to make our lives easier. The seas are not an easy place to make a living given normal times with storms and high seas, let alone facing mines and missiles.

Many individuals in the United States and Members of Congress have serious questions about U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf. However, no one will deny the sacrifice that Captain Hunt and others like him are making every day in order to allow those of us in the free world to continue living at the standards of living to which we have become accustomed.

Captain Hunt, who is a member of the International Organization of Master, Mates, and Pilots, has endured great pain and will continue to suffer the loss of a great part of his life for us.

As chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries I express my heartfelt thanks to Capt. John Hunt and wish him smooth sailings and fair seas wherever the winds of life blow him in his future endeavors.

IMPROVEMENTS TO CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mrs. KENNELLY. Today I am introducing some very necessary improvements to the Child Support Enforcement Program in a single package. The bill includes 13 different substantive and technical provisions, developed and included in the welfare reform provisions of H.R. 1720.

The bill requires that States observe guidelines on child support award amounts in setting court orders and that the guidelines be updated on a regular basis. It ensures there will be more paternity determinations in the future and increases the Federal funding match for States which adopt laws mandating wage withholding starts immediately without awaiting a 30-day arrearage. In addition, the Federal Parent Locator Services and the State child support agencies would be given access to information maintained by the Department of Labor containing information on place of employment, Social Security numbers, and addresses of employees.

The bill sets new penalties for States out of compliance with the 1984 Child Support Enforcement Amendments and sets new standards for the States to respond promptly to requests for child support enforcement. The bill adopts a carrot and stick approach to automated tracking and monitoring systems by requiring that these systems be put in place by October 1, 1992, and repealing the special 90 percent Federal match for these systems on the same date.

In addition, the legislation establishes a high level commission on interstate enforcement, still one of the most difficult problems in all of child support. The Secretary of Health and Human Services would also be expected to conduct a study of child raising costs in one- and two-parent families.

The bill provides for two sets of demonstration projects: One to identify and evaluate solutions to visitation and custody problems; another to test voluntary work, education, and training for noncustodial parents financially unable to meet their support obligations.

The total savings from these provisions is $178 million over 5 years. Improved child support enforcement should be an integral part of true welfare reform. However, I urge my colleagues who support further improvements in child support enforcement to cosponsor this bill as the single most comprehensive package pending in the House of Representatives at this time.

H.R. 3545 OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 29, 1987

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the statement of the chairman of House Ways and Means Committee. I want to commend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for all of his efforts in putting together a responsible package of revenues which I think will bring stability in the recently volatile stock market, by highlighting our efforts to bring down the budget deficit. I would like to thank the chairman of the committee for all of his work, and would like to particularly mention several issues which are of concern to my constitutents.

There is one specific provision which is mentioned in the chairman's statement about which I am especially pleased. Section 10138 of the tax title contained in the Omnibus Reconciliation Act, would limit the deductibility of interest on debt incurred in major corporate stock acquisitions. Because of an oversight in the drafting of this provision, the tax provisions in this bill would have the effect of grandfathering hostile tender offers commenced on or before October 13, 1987, but would deny equal treatment to competing offers made after October 13 from persons or parties which have the approval of management and the board of directors of target companies.

Thus, because of the way the section is drafted, the effective date provision of section 10138 of the tax title operates to deter companies who are threatened with an ongoing hostile takeover attempt from seeking out or obtaining other offers for their shareholders' stock which management believes would be in their company's and their stockholders' best interests. After seeing the chairman's statement, I am assured that this result was not intended by the Ways and Means Committee nor its staff. The need for this assurance was urgent because I am aware of its effect on currently pending tender offers which need to be responded to before this issue can be resolved in conference.

Another issue contained in the tax provisions which is of concern to my constituents would deny amortization for intangible assets that are renewing, or any intangible asset with an indeterminate useful life. The Internal Revenue Service, and the courts, have determined that a customer list is a wasting asset with a determinate life, so that the value of such a list is depreciated under existing law when the list is sold to a purchaser.

The Ways and Means Committee provision, as drafted, would change the way in which a buyer of a customer list could depreciate the value of that list. The change would greatly affect the total value of the sale of any business that depends on a customer list and not tangible assets. Especially hard hit in my district would be home heating oil businesses whose most important asset is the customer list, since their businesses have few physical assets.

In Wednesday's meeting of the Rules Committee to consider the Omnibus Reconciliation Act, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] both assured me that this provision and its deleterious effect on the home heating oil businesses would be a subject of consideration in the conference on the tax provisions.

There are two other provisions I would especially like to thank the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means for resolving favorably. One is the formula for Medicare reimbursements, which I think would very fairly cover the higher costs of providing services in urban areas, especially in my own State.

Second is the issue for freelance creators, including authors and photographers and the application of the uniform capitalization provisions in the wake of recent court decisions. The way in which the Department of Treasury contended that these rules applied to freelance creators would have created undue hardships.

It would have required each author or photographer for instance, to deduct the expenses for a work in progress only after determining the itemized expenses for each work and the proportional share of the expenses based on the income produced over the life of each creative work. I think this would have kept creative artists in the business of accounting and not in the business of writing and photographing creative works, and I am very happy that the Committee on Ways and Means, under the chairman's guidance, saw fit to correct what was obviously a serious problem for all writers and photographers nationwide.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my hope that an issue of particular importance to me, the tax treatment of prepaid legal services, will be considered in the near future. This item was not contained in the tax bill, and I think it is worth considering because of the benefits it provides to many working men and women who otherwise cannot afford attorneys.

Under current law, employers providing prepaid legal services to their employees, can deduct the attorneys fees as a business deduction, and the employees do not have to treat the amount paid or the value of the services as income. The current authority for classifying these services expires at the end of this year, and I hope that the committees in the House and Senate will consider extending this worthwhile provision. Thank you Mr. Chairman.
